Preface to Present (3rd) Edition.

The two previous editions of this work were issued in 1880, the first in April of that year and the second in October. The first edition (400 copies) was completely sold off, but the second followed too closely on the first, and only about two-thirds of the 500 copies were sold.

As this involved a considerable pecuniary loss to myself, I determined not to publish a third edition till I was sure that there would be a demand for it. It is now four years since the second edition was published, and I have received many inquiries as to when a new edition may be expected. I therefore hope that the present edition may meet with a ready sale; if it does not, I shall not again attempt the publication of an Indian Civil Service List, as the labour is great and the reward—pecuniary or otherwise—very small. The present edition originated in an attempt (which I have been obliged for the present to abandon) to compile a general Civil List for all India. It was suggested to me to do so in 1880 by the then Financial Secretary to the Government of India, and during my privilege leave this year I compiled the Covenanted and Military (in Civil employ) portions of such a list; but I was unable even to commence the Uncovenanted portion, and the Government of India have determined for the present not to publish such a list.

I therefore decided to publish the Covenanted portion with additions of my own as a third issue of my Civil Service List, and the present book is the result.

It is shorter than either of the former editions and really only consists of (1) a Gradation List arranged according to Seniority; (2) a Distribution List arranged according to Locality and (3) a Death and Retirement List, comprising all deaths and retirements which have occurred since the issue of the last edition, or from 1880 to 1885; but I have added to these three parts (4) a list of all the deaths and retirements which have occurred in the Competitive Civil Service since its commencement in 1856; (5) a detailed list of all officers serving directly under the Government of India, as there is no such official list; (6) a reprint of portions of the prefaces to the 1st and 2nd editions to this book which seemed to me still likely to be of some use for reference; (7) a reprint of the greater part of a pamphlet on the Competitive Civil Service of India which I published in Bombay in 1882: I have corrected most of the figures of this pamphlet up to date, i. e., 1st January, 1885; (8) a letter to the Pioneer of the 24th September, 1884, on the subject of increasing the age for admission to the Indian Civil Service; with the Pioneer's reply and the articles of the Native Press on the subject; (9) a paper on the peculiarities of the present rules for pension in the Indian Civil Service, with some suggestions for their amendment; (10) tables of the average salaries of Civilians in the different Provinces in the years 1854 to 1880, with remarks on them : (11) an Index of Name s—arranged with a separate column for each part of the book ; and (12) an Index of Subjects.

A work like the present is completely separate from, and even antithetic to, the official Provincial Civil lists, and its raison d'être differs completely from theirs. Their object (in the Covenanted portion) is to show all the facts with regard to the Civilians serving in that Province; the Civilians' names are given acording to Provincial seniority, and the Province is the centre round which everything is arranged. My object is the very contrary of this. I wish to show the Indian Civil Service as a whole, arranged solely according to the dates of appointment of the members in England and quite apart from Provincial or Departmental seniority. Now that two out of three of the Civil Funds have been abolished and that the Bengal Civil Fund is likely to follow soon, it is quite time that all distinctions of Presidency should be abolished, and that an Indian Civilian should belong to the Indian Civil Service, and not to a local Service for Bombay, Madras, or Bengal. The spread of railways and the exigencies of a more advanced system of government render it necessary that the Government should be able to move a Civilian wherever it seems to them desirable to do so ; but, though this right should pertain to the Government, the individual Civilian should have a right equally inherent and indestructible—that of ranking in his original place in the whole Indian Service quite independently of Provincial seniority or Provincial examinations.

The present list (in the 1st or gradation part) shows exactly the seniority of every Civilian according to the date of his appointment in England, and I hope that it may be one means of tending towards the amalgamation of the three Services and fusing them into one great Service. The other lists and appendices will, I hope, prove useful in their way by giving some facts which are not to be ascertained from the Provincial lists ; and the book itself by giving its facts in one small volume for all India instead of in eight volumes which contain the names of all servants of Government instead of Covenanted Civilians only. This volume is intended to be a Manual for the Civil Service of India, which shall afford all such information on the present state of the Service as a member of it is likely to require, and shall contain a certain amount of historical information for those who may desire to know how the Competitive Service has grown up and how it has succeeded. I have appended a letter I wrote to the Pioneer in September last on the age of admission to the Civil Service with the answer of the Pioneer and the remarks of the Native Press on the controversy. All the lists are corrected up to the 1st January, 1885, and the book has been published as quickly after that date as it was possible to pass the final corrections through the Press.

Since the competition system of appointment to the Indian Civil Service first began in 1856, 1,041 members have been appointed to the Service in this manner; of these 81 have died and 136 have retired, or 217 in all have disappeared from the ranks of the service, leaving 824 still in it. The highest percentage of casualties is of course in the earlier years, where the members have become entitled to their full pensions after 25 years' service; but this at present only includes the first four years 1856 to 1859. The highest percentage of deaths and retirements in any year is in 1859, where it already reaches 70 per cent.; the next is in 1857 with 65 per cent., and the first year of the competition system is 3rd with 60 per cent. In 1858 and 1860 42 per cent. have already died and retired; and in 1862 37 per cent.; but after that the percentage falls rapidly, and no other year has lost more than 28 per cent. of its members. The years down to 1867 have all lost 20 per cent. and from 1869 to 1876 the loss varies from 15 to 18 per cent. but the year 1868 has the extraordinarily low number of 10 per cent. 1879 is the only year [except the last two, 1883 and 1884] which has lost none of its members.

Retirements may of course result from other and pleasanter causes than sickness, and they do not afford any criterion of the health of the Civilians of those years; but the deaths, if the percentage be taken annually, will afford a rough index of the health of the members.

The percentage of deaths for the first fifteen years is as follows :—

Year.	Number of appointments.	Number of deaths.	Total percentage of deaths.	Percentage of deaths per annum.	Order.
1856	20	6	30	1·07	2
1857	20	4	20	·74	9
1858	12	3	25	·96	5
1859	20	9	45	1·80	1
1860	32	8	25	1·04	3
1861	68	16	24	1·04	4
1862	61	10	16	·73	10
1863	91	18	20	·95	6
1864	52	10	19	·95	7
1865	36	4	11	·58	13
1866	...	...	...	...	...
1867	45	6	13	·72	11
1868	39	4	10	·60	12
1869	47	4	9	·56	14
1870	41	5	12	·80	8

1859 is therefore the unhealthiest year with 1·80 per cent. per annum of deaths and 1856 next with 1·07. The healthiest years are 1869 with only ·56 and 1865 with ·58.

PART VI.—Introduction to previous Editions.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION (APRIL, 1880).

My design in compiling this work has been to collect into a single volume all the current facts with regard to the Indian Civil Service which could ordinarily be required. The accepted division of the Service into Bengal, Bombay, and Madras, though still convenient for some purposes, and necessary as long as the Funds exist in their present shape, is antiquated and generally useless, as a Bombay Civilian may serve in the Punjab or Lower Bengal, a Madras Civilian at Sinda, and a Bengal Civilian in Madras or Bombay (as is now the case). I have therefore as much as possible ignored the distinction of Bengal, Bombay, and Madras Services, and have treated all three as one great Indian Civil Service having the same prospects, conditions, origin and constitution.

It is by this name alone that the Service is known in England, and it has the great advantage of representing the unity and identity of the whole Service which the use of the three separate names implicitly denies. Taking the Service all over India as one corporate body, I have tried to give with regard to each member of it all the facts which are necessary to show (1), if he be still a member, his position and standing in the Service, his locality, pay, and past services, or (2), if he have died or retired, the date and place of the death and the date of the retirement.

For this purpose I have compiled the following lists :—

(1) A Combined List.	(5) A Salary List.
(2) A Provincial List.	(6) An Establishment List.
(3) An Appointment List.	(7) A Service List.
(4) A Distribution List.

All but the 1st and 5th of these are arranged according to the nine provinces into which India is divided.

(1) The Combined List shows in one list, arranged according to the order of passing the final examinations (whether at Haileybury or with the Civil Service Commissioners), all the Civilians now in the Service. In the first portion containing those Civilians who were appointed from Haileybury, I have (from want of further information) only been able to give the Civilians in the order in which they stand in each presidency, with their number in that year, their province, pay and appointments (with dates).

In the second portion containing those Civilians who have been appointed under the competition system I have arranged the names in the exact order in which they stood at the final examinations in England and have included all those who have either died or retired, their names being given in italics. This arrangement was not a matter so easy as would at first sight seem probable; for, as is always the case in dealing with any large number of persons, the most unexpected freaks and irregularities appear occasionally.

Thus the C. S. Commissioners for three or four years (1868-70) arranged the selected candidates not (as they were bound to do, in my opinion, by their own regulation, if not by law) according to the results of the final examination only, but according to the total number of marks obtained in all the examinations after the open competition. This list was accepted by the Provincial Governments, and the Civilians now rank for seniority in accordance with it; but I am unable to find in the regulations any authority for such an arrangement, and I have accordingly in the Combined List ranked these Civilians according "to their position at the final examination" as prescribed in the published regulations.

These variations make the Combined List no easy one to compile; but I believe that as it has been done three or four times over, and has been carefully checked subsequently, it is nearly as accurate as it is possible to make it. I have excluded from this list all those who, though they passed the final examinations, did not proceed to India, as they can hardly be said to have belonged to the Indian Civil Service since they never joined it.

The Combined List therefore shows the exact relative position held by each Civilian to all others, and gives the names of all Civilians of all provinces and presidencies in one general list. The Combined List gives in the case of each competition Civilian (1) his number in the Combined List; (2) his number in the final examination of his year, (3) his number in the open competitive examination of his year (if the Civilian did not pass the open competition along with the others who came out to India in his year, this column is left blank); (4) his name in full (in the case of Oriental members I have corrected the spelling of the names when necessary according to the Jonesian system); (5) his degree or degrees; (6) his university and college or, where he was not at any college, his school: when this column is blank, it shows that the Civilian was privately educated or only at private schools: all schools which are not purely private schools are entered: the colleges and schools are taken from the C. S. Commissioners' reports up to 1863 inclusive, and after that from the lists sent out to the Government of India by the C. S. Commissioners, so that they may be relied on as accurate; (7) his province, i. e., the province to which he is actually attached at the present time: where Bombay and Madras Civilians are serving under the Government of India, I have entered Bo. C. S. and M. C. S. under the word "India;" (8) his salary, i. e., his total pay including acting allowances; (9) his appointments, i. e., both substantive and officiating, but the necessity of saving space has generally compelled me to give the date of only the most recent appointment.

(2) The Provincial Lists.—In these lists I have taken the local Gradation Civil Service List of the province and have excluded from it all those who no longer hold a substantive appointment in that province, so that the list may show the exact order of Civilians for promotion by seniority in the province.

(3) The Appointment Lists.—These lists contain the names of all the Civilians who are comprised in the Provincial Lists re-arranged according to the nature of the appointments they hold.

They represent the Civilian portion of parts III to XVI of the ordinary Civil Lists.

In these, again, the first part, relating to the Government of India, is original and will, I hope, be found useful, as it was not available before.

It may be necessary to notice that in the non-regulation provinces like the Panjáb, the Appointment List differs from the Provincial List in giving the Civilians classified under each kind of appointment instead of by strict seniority. The latter principle prevails so generally that at first sight each list might seem to be a reprint of the other, but it is not so. In the Provincial Lists some of the non-regulation Governments arrange Civilians according to a system of provincial seniority, the principle of which is not stated; but I presume that the rank is determined by the date of passing the provincial higher standard of examination. I am not aware on what authority the seniority of Civilians among themselves is decided by these examinations, as in all regulation provinces the rank in the Provincial List is determined by the order of passing the final examination in England; and under the Act of Parliament constituting the competition service this latter examination is the only one which is recognised as determining rank in the Service (sections 32, 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 106).

(4) The Distribution Lists.—These lists show under each province the divisions and districts into which it is divided, with the Civilians who are posted at each station. In the first part, the Government of India, the distribution is of course according to departments, as there are no local sub-divisions; but I have shown in this section, under the head of each place, what officers of the Government of India are actually serving there now. In regulation provinces I have given the Judge, Magistrate, Joint Magistrate and Assistant Magistrate of each district, and in the non-regulation provinces the Deputy Commissioner, Judicial Assistant, Assistant Commissioner, and Settlement Officers (if any). The Commissioners of divisions are given in both cases in the first column on the left hand. A list of the officers at head-quarters is given before each Provincial Distribution List, and officers who do not belong to any particular district are included in this list.

In Bombay the sub-divisions are more numerous, and I have given the Judge, Assistant Judge, Collector, 1st Assistant Collector, 2nd Assistant Collector, and Assistant Collector of each district. In Madras I have added to the divisions usual in Northern India those of Head Assistant Collector (answering to 2nd grade Joint Magistrate) and Special Assistant, the latter being confined to five districts. There are Commissioners of divisions in Bombay, but none in Madras; while there is a Board of Revenue in Madras, but none in Bombay: in Bengal and the N.-W. P. there are of course both classes of officers: the Members of the Board are shown in the list of officers at head-quarters.

The whole of these Distribution Lists are compiled in an original form, which, I think, has the advantage of clearness and compactness, although the information was previously available in various forms in the different Civil Lists.

(5) The Salary List.—In this list I have thrown together the names of all the Civilians throughout India who draw a salary of Rs. 2,000 a month or more: and have shown with regard to each, (1) his number on the list, (2) his name, (3) his pay including officiating allowance, (4) his province to which he is at present attached, (5) his year of entry into the Service, and (6) his present appointment.

(6) The Establishment Lists.—These lists are intended to show the strength of the establishment of Civilians serving under each Government in India. Each list gives the number of officers of each designation serving under that particular Government, with the amount of their salaries: it does not represent the sanctioned strength or establishment, but gives the number of officers actually serving under each Government on the 1st of January, 1880.

These numbers are, it will be seen—

					Total	943

The total number of Civilians serving in India is given at the end of the Combined List (page 118) and also in appendices IX and X as 917; the difference is due to some of the Civilians serving under the Government of India having been reckoned again in the lists of their own Presidency: the error was discovered too late to be rectified in this issue: there are really only 34 Civilians possessing substantive appointments under the Government of India.

The Establishment Lists are original and have not been published before.

(7) The Table of Average Salaries* of all Civilians of each year in each province on the 1st January, 1880. This table is an enlargement and continuation up to date of the table of average salaries which I gave in my book on "The Indian Civil Service and the Competition System" in 1875.

The figures under each year and province represent the average salary of all the Civilians of that year who are actually serving in that province at the time: the last column gives the average of those averages and shows the average pay of all the Civilians of each year throughout India.

The table shows some curious results: for instance in the column of Average of all India, it will be seen that the pay is highest in 1846, viz., Rs. 4,833, and is higher in 1846 and 1847 than in 1844 and 1845; in 1848 it sinks suddenly to only Rs. 2,720, and then rises in 1849 to Rs. 3,708 and in 1850 to Rs. 3,852, both of which are higher than those of 1844; these high rates in 1849-50 are caused by the salaries of Members of Council. Again in 1852 it is Rs. 3,956, or a higher rate than any of the previous years except 1846-47. It then keeps at about Rs. 3,000 from 1853 to 1856: in 1857 it drops to Rs. 2,700, and remains at that rate during 1858 and 1859.

From 1860 it decreases rapidly and steadily from Rs. 2,251 in that year to Rs. 1,709 in 1863, but in 1864 it rises again to Rs. 1,793 owing to an appointment of Rs. 2,583 in the Central Provinces: it falls suddenly in 1865 to Rs. 1,162, and then rises again in 1867 to Rs. 1,392 owing to two appointments on Rs. 2,000 in that year in the North-Western Provinces and Bombay. In 1868 it falls to Rs. 1,013 and in 1869 to Rs. 927, whence it rises in 1870 to Rs. 969 owing to one appointment of Rs. 2,000 having fallen to that year in British Burmah. From 1871 it decreases steadily from Rs. 878 in that year to Rs. 404 in 1879. It may be interesting to know that the average pay of all Civilians in all India from 1844 to 1879 is Rs. 2,140 per mensem. If we compare the salaries in different provinces in the same year, we find great variations. Thus, beginning from 1850, at which time the numbers of Civilians still remaining in the list first commence to be sufficiently large to give a fair average per province, it will be seen that while India is Rs. 6,686 and Madras nearly Rs. 4,000, the N.-W. P. and Bombay are only Rs. 3,000 and Bengal is only Rs. 2,500. On the other hand in 1856 India is only Rs. 2,791, while the Panjáb is Rs. 3,222 and Bengal and Bombay about Rs. 2,900, Madras being Rs. 2,600 and the N.-W. P. only Rs. 2,200. Later on, in the years when such large numbers of Civilians were sent to Northern India, the figures are as follows: In 1861 India is Rs. 2,590, Madras Rs. 2,333, Bengal Rs. 2,069, and Bombay Rs. 2,000, while the N.-W. P. and Panjáb are only Rs. 1,892 and Rs. 1,785 respectively. In 1882 India is again Rs. 2,500, while Bombay and Madras run it close with Rs. 2,436 and Rs. 2,385; but Bengal, N.-W. P., and Panjáb decrease in that order, being Rs. 1,880, Rs. 1,526, and Rs. 1,477. The five provinces which are really similarly constituted (the Government of India and the smaller provinces being exceptional) are Bengal, N.-W. P., Panjáb, Bombay, and Madras, and these, in the years regarding which there has been so much controversy, seem to be situated as follows: from 1861 to 1863 (all years given are to be considered inclusive) Madras is much the best off with Rs. 2,333, 2,385, and 1,834, Bombay comes next with Rs. 2,009, 2,439, and 1,724, Lower Bengal third with Rs. 2,069, 1,880, and 1,635, the N.-W. P. fourth with Rs. 1,892, 1,526, and 1,280, and the Panjáb last with Rs. 1,785, 1,477, and 1,505.

But in 1864 a great change occurs and the Panjáb jumps up to first place with Rs. 2,000, Bombay being second with 1,728 and Bengal third with 1,672, Madras is fourth with 1,169 and N.-W. P. last with 900. The Rs 2,000 in the Panjáb is so very high that I am rather afraid there may have been some mistake in the calculations; but I have no books at present with me, so I cannot verify them. In 1865 the order is Bombay first, Bengal second, Panjáb third, N.-W. P. fourth, and Madras fifth, so that it may be given as a general conclusion that from 1861 to 1863 Madras is the best off and the Panjab and N.-W. P. are the worst off; and in 1864 and 1865 the Panjáb and Bombay are the best off and Madras and the N.-W. P. are the worst off. Up to 1864 Bombay is always second and Lower Bengal third among these provinces, but in 1865 Bombay is first and Lower Bengal second.

From 1867 to 1870 Madras is worse off than the N.-W. P. or Bengal, but from 1870 onwards Madras is better off than the N.-W. P.

(8) The Rate of Pay Table† shows the number and the percentage of Civilians in each province who are drawing each rate of pay at intervals of Rs. 500; from those who draw Rs. 500 or under to those who draw more than Rs. 3,500, of whom there are only 54 in all India.

* This has not been re-compiled for the 2nd edition.

† This has not been re-published in the 2nd edition.

The total number of each grade in all India is :—

				Percentage.
Not above Rs. 500	...	...	137	14·4
Rs. 500 to „ 1,000	...	...	289	30·4
„ 1,000 to „ 1,500	...	...	121	12·8
„ 1,500 to „ 2,000	...	...	104	11·0
„ 2,000 to „ 2,500	...	...	167	17·6
„ 2,500 to „ 3,000	...	...	45	4·7
„ 3,000 to „ 3,500	...	...	32	3·4
above „ 3,500	...	...	54	5·7
		Total	940	100·0

It will be seen, therefore, that 30 per cent., or nearly one-third of all Civilian salaries, are between Rs. 500 and 1,000; that 24 per cent., or nearly one-fourth, are between Rs. 1,000 and 2,000; and 22 per cent., or nearly one-fourth, are between Rs. 2,000 and 3,000; the remaining one-sixth consists of 14 per cent. below Rs. 500 and of 10 per cent. above Rs. 3,000; so that, taking the totals, 10 per cent. are above Rs. 3,000, 32 per cent. are above Rs. 2,000, 55 per cent. are above Rs. 1,000, and 86 per cent. are above Rs. 500.

(9), (10), and (11) The Lists of the Members of the Bengal, Madras, and Bombay Services who have retired or died since 1857.

In Part XII. I have given an abstract of these lists which shows the number of Civilians who retired and died in each year in each Presidency and the total for all India.

It will be seen that the total varies from 69 in 1857 and 58 in 1877 to 19 in 1870, but the former were abnormal years on account of the Mutiny and of the special retirements. The highest of the normal years is 50 in 1863, so that the number of deaths and retirements in the whole Indian Civil Service in a normal year may be said to vary between 20 and 50. The average of the 21 normal years from 1858 to 1879 inclusive (but excluding 1877) is 34·4; and the rate of recruitment, when taken over long periods, and as long as the Service remains at its present strength, should no doubt be about 35 per annum. The actual rate of recruitment since 1865 (inclusive) has been 33·8, and, as the losses have been 34·4, they have almost exactly balanced one another. It will be seen that the total number of Civilians stood at 909 in 1865 and is now 917; the slight difference is due to the average losses having been calculated from 1858, while the average recruitment has been taken from 1865, the years between 1858 and 1865 having been periods of abnormally large recruitment.

The proportion of deaths to retirements in any Presidency is of course very various: thus in Bengal in 1860 there were 22 retirements to 6 deaths, while in 1862 there were only 3 retirements to 7 deaths; in 1871 there were 16 retirements to 2 deaths, while in 1876 there were only 6 retirements to 12 deaths; this last variation was, however, probably caused by Civilians postponing their retirement in 1876 on account of the proposed scheme for the acceleration of promotion which many thought would include a bonus to retiring members.

Part XIII contains a complete History of the Services of all Civilians, as far as I have been able to obtain them.

Division I.—The Government of India is entirely original, as the services of these officers have not been published before; the earlier portions of their services have been taken from the Provincial Service Lists of the provinces to which they belonged previous to their transfer to the Government of India, and the latter portion has been compiled by myself from the various Gradation Lists.

I trust that the omissions and abbreviations will not be found objectionable in any way. I have omitted (1) all privilege leave, as it does not affect service; (2) all subsidiary leave; (3) all short periods of absence without leave up to 10 days, and (4) all promotions to and reversions from Joint Magistracies or different grades of Joint Magistracies when not exceeding three months. These are, I think, quite unimportant, and their omission has enabled me to reduce the bulk of some records very considerably.

Appendices.*

Appendix I, the diagram of the supply of Civilians, illustrates, I think, forcibly the irregularity of that supply during the earlier years of the competition system: since 1865 it has been much more regular, and the inconveniences produced by the earlier want of system will no doubt not be felt in future. Appendices II and III are continuations up to date of the similar tables which I published in my work on the Indian Civil Service in 1875. They give all the figures and details with regard to recruitment and to losses by death and retirement, and will, I hope, prove useful.

* The Appendices are not republished in the 2nd edition, but the information here given may be useful, if it is retained.

Appendix IV gives the College or School of each Civilian, and this is the first time I have been able to give a table of this kind complete up to date, as the C. S. Commissioners ceased to publish these data from 1864. I have however now obtained them from the lists sent out by the Secretary of State to the Indian Governments, and I think it will be admitted that no greater refutation is possible of Colonel G. Chesney's statement, that the University and Public School men among the competition Civilians are "more waifs and strays." Colonel Chesney said ('Edinburgh Review,' April 1874), "practically the English Universities contribute no candidates to the competition"; how many "candidates" they contribute I do not know, nor does Colonel Chesney, as the colleges of the unsuccessful competitors are not given anywhere; but this table will prove how many of the successful competitors are University men, even in the narrow sense of the term as used by Colonel Chesney of the English Universities only.

It will be seen from this table that of 903 men appointed to the Service from 1856 to 1879, 157 were at Oxford and 107 at Cambridge, so that in the narrowest sense of the term 264, or nearly one-third, were University men; if to these be added the other English, Scotch and Irish Universities we obtain a total of 618 out of 903, who are bonâ fide University men. If a proportion of more than two-thirds can fairly be called "more waifs and strays in the list," then Colonel Chesney is right; but if not, it would have been perhaps better had he ascertained the facts accurately and carefully before making so misleading an assertion, as he did when he stated that "scarcely any one ever comes up from the different Universities and Colleges of the kingdom for these great prizes" (p. 342, 'Edin. Rev.,' April 1874). If we analyse the whole table we find that the proportion of candidates educated at the various classes of institutions is as follows:—

Oxford	157
Cambridge	107
Dublin	111
London	102
Queen's, Ireland ...	49
Edinburgh	50
Aberdeen	27
Glasgow	7
St. Andrews ...	8
	618

English Universities	366
Scotch "	92
Irish "	160
Foreign "	14
Total Universities	632
Public Schools	140
Private Colleges	14
Grammar Schools	68
Total at Colleges and public Schools	854
At private Schools	49
Grand Total ...	903
Percentage of those educated at Colleges and private Schools to total number appointed	94·6

It will, I think, hardly be believed, after all that has been said to the contrary, that 95 per cent. of all the competition Civilians who have come to India have been educated at a University, College, or Public School: but of the fact there can be no doubt. The figures are taken from the official returns compiled by the C. S. Commissioners, and the only point on which there can be any difference of opinion is as to which schools are to be reckoned public schools and which are not; but I think my list will be accepted as a fair one, and I have included all Grammar Schools, as they are really public schools as opposed to proprietary schools. It may therefore be said with confidence that 95 per cent. of the Competition Civilians have been educated at a University, College, Public School or Grammar School, and only 5 per cent. at private schools and by private tuition. If this be the case, surely all the ill-founded statements about the Service being supplied chiefly from the cramming institutions, and about the "University and Public School system being wrong, if the system of selection for the Indian Civil Service is right,"* may be consigned to the oblivion they deserve; for the two systems, thus absurdly contrasted, are now shown to be almost absolutely identical.

Appendix V gives all the details with regard to the University degrees obtained by Civilians in each year, and Appendix VI gives an abstract of the figures so arrived at. I think that the percentage of Graduates shown will create some surprise, and yet, as I have remarked in the foot-note to this appendix, it is by no means complete, for it is impossible in many cases to ascertain the degrees. It will be seen that from 1856 to 1860 the number of graduates never fell below 50 per cent., that out of the 22 years it was over 40 per cent. in 9 years and over 30 per cent. in 15 years, while the average for the whole 22 years is 37 per cent. The figure of 36 per cent. given at the bottom column is inclusive of the year 1879, about which my information is very imperfect as yet; but from 1856 to 1878 the average of graduates is 37 per cent., or somewhat more than a third of all the Civilians. The only years in which the percentage sank below 20 are 1869 and 1877. If those who possess degrees and are not mentioned in the Appendix V will kindly inform me of the fact, I am sure that the results will be even more favourable than they are now.

* Col. Chesney, 'Edin. Rev.,' April, 1874.

The total number of Graduates of each kind is as follows :—

B. A.	191
M. A....	99
LL. B.	13
LL. D.	10
D. C. L.	4
Other Degrees	8
Total ...	325

Appendix VII gives all the honorary distinctions which have been awarded to members of the Service, and I have added the names of those who are Fellows of Learned Societies as far as I have been able to ascertain them; but I have no doubt that there are many more. It will be seen that the numbers possessing orders are—

I. The Bath—1. G. C. B.	1
2. K. C. B.	4
3. C. B.	21
Total ...		26
II. Star of India—1. G. C. S. I.	5
2. K. C. S. I.	21
3. C. S. I.	37
Total ...		63
III. V. C.		2
IV. Councillors of the Empress		6
V. Order of the Indian Empire, C. I. E.		18
Total ...		115

As many of the distinctions in different orders are possessed by the same person, there are not so many as 115 Civilians who are decoré and the number will hardly be considered large.

Appendix VIII. gives the names and marks of the first and second man in each year both at the open competitions and at the final examinations; and where there are 60 appointments the first three are given, and where 80 the first four, so as to maintain a proportion of 5 per cent. of the whole. It will be noted in the open competitions that in 1859 Mathematics was raised from 1,000 to 1,250, and Sanskrit and Arabic from 375 to 500; in 1867 the number of marks (1,000) awarded to English literature was divided into 500 for literature and 500 for History, and the marks for Sanskrit were reduced from 500 to to 375. In 1869 Sanskrit was put back to 500, and Natural Science was increased from 500 to 1,000.

In July, 1878, the first examination under the new system of enforced attendance at a University, great changes were made. English Composition, History and Literature were reduced from 500 to 300 each, Greek was reduced from 750 to 600, and Latin increased from 750 to 800. French and German were augmented from 375 to 500, while Italian was raised from 375 to 400. Mathematics was lowered from 1,250 to 1,000, and Natural Science from 1,000 to 600, being also divided into Electricity, &c., 300, and Mechanics, &c., 300; Moral Science was reduced from 500 to 300 and was confined to Logic. There has not been time as yet to see what the effects of these changes will be. I append the names of the first men in each subject in the whole 24 years, with their marks and the maximum, but the fixed deduction of 125 must of course be taken into account after 1863:—

In the Final Examinations the marks remained the same from 1860 to 1864 (there were no Final Examinations before 1860); but in 1865 many changes were made. Law was raised from 1,000 to 1,200; the History and Geography of India and Political Economy were reduced from 500 to 350; and all the vernacular languages of India and Arabic were increased from 350 to 400. Since 1865 no changes have been made.

Appendix IX shows the number of Civilians employed in each province and Presidency. It will be seen that Bengal has exactly twice as many as Madras and Bombay put together, 611 against 306, and I think this great disproportion shows the anachronism of keeping up the three Services separate. The Bengal Service now really furnishes officers for all India except the regulation districts of the Madras and Bombay Presidencies. As regards the provinces, Lower Bengal has the largest staff, 214, and the North-Western provinces the next, 194; both these, which are mere sub-divisions of the Bengal Service, being larger than the whole Presidencies of Madras (100) and Bombay (146). The Non-Regulation Provinces and the Government of India have from 92 down to 23.

Appendix X gives the number of Civilians of each year of entry who are still left in the Service. Of 1840 there is only 1, and of 1843 and 1844 only 2 each. The numbers then mount steadily, except that there are only 3 left of 1848, till we come to 1852, which has only 7. After this the number is regulated chiefly by the original supply in that year.

The large years are—

1856 ...	31	1861 ...	53	1863 ...	69
1857 ...	45	1862 ...	50	1864 ...	44

After 1864 there are never more than 40 in any year; but in the three years 1861-62-63 there are in Bengal still 122 members of the Service, or one-fifth of the whole (611). Madras has 57 Civilians in 1862-3-64 alone out of a total of 100; and Bombay has 48 in 1867-68-69-70 out of a total of 146. The blocks in the respective Services occur, therefore, in the latter of these years in 1862-63 in Bengal, in 1863-64 in Madras, and in 1869-70 in Bombay; and it might be well if the overflowing years of one Presidency could feed the scanty years of another, so as to equalize promotion to some extent throughout India.

Appendices XI and XII show the respective numbers of Haileybury and Competition Civilians in the three Presidencies and 9 Provinces, at each period of 5 years from 1860 to 1880, and also in 1858, the earliest year for which I could obtain data. Dealing only with totals for all India, it will be seen that there were, in 1858, 798 Haileybury Civilians to 52 competition ones; by 1860 there was but little change, the numbers being 750 to 67.

But by 1865 a great change had occurred; and they were then 547 to 362, or 1½ to 1: by 1870 the competition Civilians had exceeded the Haileybury in number, and were 438 to 418; by 1875 the proportions were 601 to 295, or more than 2 to 1; and by 1880 this had increased to 750 to 167, or 4½ to 1.

In Appendix XIII I have distinguished the Haileybury and competition Civilians from one another in the only years when they are mixed up together, viz., 1856 and 1857 in Bengal and Bombay. In Madras the Haileybury Civilians end in 1857 and the competition do not begin till 1860.

In Appendix XIV and last I have shown the number of Civilians who were in the Service in each Presidency in each year from 1857 to 1880. It will be seen that the total has varied but little in the 28 years: it was 886 in 1857 and is 917 now. It rose to its highest point (968) in 1873 and fell to its lowest (802) in 1861.

In Bengal it has increased from 553 in 1857 to 611 in 1880 owing to the absorption into that Presidency of the Non-Regulation Provinces; but Madras has decreased from 185 to 160 and Bombay from 148 to 146.

The largest number in Bengal was 644 in 1877 and the smallest 494 in 1861.

The largest number in Madras was 196 in 1865 and the smallest 153 in 1862.

The largest number in Bombay was 175 in 1874 and the smallest 126 in 1863.

I have now explained and illustrated as far as I was able all the parts of the book and the Appendices, and I need only speak of a few topics of a more general nature.

(1) Spelling.—As regards the spelling of the names of places, I have followed the Jonesian or scientific system absolutely, and have not attempted any compromise, which, though it may be suitable for official works intended for all classes of readers, is very unsatisfactory, unscientific, and ill-adapted for the members of a highly educated Service who will be the chief readers of this book. In Northern India, I believe, I have been able to give the names with accuracy; in Bombay I have sometimes been doubtful; in Madras the corruptions from the native names are so astounding that they assume the form of wholly different words, and it is necessary to give a more or less imperfect transliteration in order that the word may be recognizable as the same. In Burma I have not ventured to interfere with the spelling, except in the case of a few well-known names; but it is now evidently totally unsystematic.

(3) Objects effected.—I hope that by uniting in one volume of moderate size the whole of the Civil Service portions of the Civil Lists of 9 Provinces, and the lists of Services which form five separate volumes, besides giving much new and original matter, I shall have provided the members of the Service with a work which will be useful, (1) from its saving expense and bulk, as the same information could only be obtained before from 9 separate volumes; (2) from its concentrating in one volume all the Civilian portion of many volumes, the remainder of which was not required as a rule by Civilian readers; and (3) by its affording much information which was previously either not available at all, or was only attainable after long and troublesome searches.

PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION.

1. The first edition of this work which was published in April last was intended to be a permanent record of many facts relating to the Indian Civil Service which do not require to be republished at short intervals. The present edition is intended to be a current List representing the actual state of the Service as it is at the present moment, and many things are therefore omitted in it which it was necessary to include in the first edition: for instance the History of Services, which of course varies very slowly, and the Appendices, which gave various details which need not be corrected and written up to date, oftener than once in two years or so. This has caused a reduction in the bulk of the book from 660 pages to about 380 pages and a corresponding reduction in price from Rs. 6 to Rs. 4 (or in England from 12s. to 8s.).

2. Should the present edition meet with a sufficient sale, my intention now is to publish a current list like the present one twice a year (probably in April and October) and a revised edition of the complete work once in two years.

3. It may be well to note seriatim the chief changes made in the present edition: and I have reprinted the greater portion of the preface to the first edition, so that the information given in it may be available to those who possess only the second edition.

4. Part I.—(The Combined List). This list in the present edition combines the information given in Parts I and II of the previous edition: i.e., besides giving the numbers in the Open and Final Examinations and in the Combined List, the Name, Degrees, University, College and School, Province, Pay, and Appointments of each Civilian, it gives also the number in the Provincial List, the Date of Arrival, Periods of Leave taken, Actual Residence, Total Non-Residence, and Total Service of each Civilian, the number of columns being increased from 9 to 15. The list now affords all the information given in any of the official lists: and also the following additional particulars, which are not contained in the official lists (1) Total Non-Residence and (2) Total Service.

I hope that it will be found convenient to have all the particulars about each Civilian on one page, and to obviate the necessity for referring to two separate portions of the book.

5. Part II.—(The Provincial List). I have retained in this part a list of names for each province, arranged in the provincial order of seniority, which in the Panjáb and in Oudh differs very considerably from the seniority of the Combined List. I have given the appointments opposite to the names as a further guide to Provincial seniority. It has been necessary to abbreviate the names of the appointments as much as possible in this list, and I have therefore given at the end a list of the abbreviations used.

6. Part III.—(The Appointment Lists). This part is exactly as it was in the first edition, except that the lists of all the provinces have been reduced to one standard pattern, and some compression has been used.

7. Part IV.—(The Distribution Lists.) This being original matter re-appears in the same form as in the first edition.

8. Part V.—(Salary List). This is in the same form as before, but I have omitted all Collectors and Judges from the list, as their salaries are perfectly well known.

9. Part VI.—(Establishment Lists.) This has merely been corrected up to date; no alteration in form has been made.

10. Part VII.—(List of Deaths and Retirements). This list has been confined to the last three years, 1878-80, instead of extending over the whole period from 1857, and it has been made much more detailed, as I have now given besides the name, year, and date of retirement, also the date of entry into the Service, place of death, amount of pension, and length of service.

11. Part VIII.—(History of Services). In this edition I have confined the history of the Services of Civilians to those serving under the Government of India and in the minor Provinces of Assam, Central Provinces, Maisúr, and British Burmah. I have done so because I published the History of Services in full for all provinces in the last edition, and it is very bulky; and also because the Services of Civilians in the Regulation Provinces and the Panjáb are now published by each Local Government in separate volumes which are easily obtainable.

I propose to publish the full History of Services for all provinces in the complete edition of this work once in two years.

12. Part IX.—(Detailed Lists of Civilians serving under the Government of India). This is a new part not contained in the former edition: it is original, being compiled from the various official lists, and will I hope be useful, as the information is not readily obtainable elsewhere. The Civilians are arranged in the order of seniority in the Department under which they are serving, thus:—

(1) Financial Department.
(2) Foreign Department.
(3) Legislative Department.
(4) Home Department.

13. Part X—the Index—is in the same form as before, but many names have been eliminated by the omission of all those of the Haileybury Civilians who died and retired from 1857 to 1877. The plan of giving an Index to all the separate parts in parallel columns headed with the numbers of the parts is, I believe, original, and I hope will be found useful.

14. In conclusion I may perhaps be allowed to say a word on the personal aspect of the publication. The last edition, although all the 400 copies were sold, was not remunerative; and it and the present edition have involved a large amount of labor and time which I find extremely difficult to spare, as my official work is very heavy. The present edition is published almost at cost price, and, if Civilians find it useful, I would ask them to support it, as it will be impossible for me to continue the publication, unless it at least pays its own expenses. It was undertaken with a view of furnishing the Service with a useful compendium of information regarding the Service, and from the letters I have received I have every reason to believe that it has in many cases been found of use; but it will be impossible for me to continue to devote to it the greater portion of my scanty leisure time, unless the demand for it is sufficient to secure the sale of at least 500 copies of each issue. The various Governments in India now take a considerable number of copies, and if all those Civilians who take an interest in Service matters will join in supporting it, its circulation to the above extent will be secure[illegible].

Madras, 28th October, 1880.

PART VII.

THE

COMPETITIVE CIVIL SERVICE OF INDIA,

FROM 1856 TO 1884.

PART VII.—The Competitive Civil Service of India, from 1856 to 1884.

I.

Twenty-six years ago the first competitive examinations for the Civil Service of India were held in London. From the year 1856 till the present time these examinations have been held annually and, with slight modifications, on the same system; and the result now is that about 88 per cent. of the whole Civil Service of India is composed of the officers so selected; Haileybury now claims only 12 per cent., or 118 in all. (1)

This being the case, it may not be uninteresting to see how time has dealt with those who came out in the earlier years of the competitive system. In the first five years, 1856-60, 104 officers were appointed. Of these 49 (or 47 per cent.) are dead or have retired and 55 (or 53 per cent.) are still in the service. (2) As yet only those who came out in 1856 and 1857 are entitled to retire on the full pension, so that the proportion of retirements in those years is, of course, greater than in the three subsequent ones. The figures are—

	1856.	1857.	1858.	1859.	1860.	Total.
No. of appointments ...	20	20	12	20	32	104
No. of deaths and retirements	10	12	4	10	13	49
Percentage ...	50	60	33	50	41	47
No. of deaths ...	6	5	3	7	10	31
No. of retirements ...	4	7	1	3	3	18

The percentage of deaths is as follows:—

	1856.	1857.	1858.	1859.	1860.	Total.
No. of appointments ...	20	20	12	20	32	104
No. of deaths ...	6	5	3	7	10	31
Percentage ...	30	25	25	35	31	30
Period years...	26	25	24	23	22	24

We thus find that the highest percentage of deaths is not among those who have been longest in the country, but in 1859, only 23 years ago, and the next highest is in the last year we have examined, 1860, or only 22 years ago. The years 1857 and 1858 are particularly healthy, with only 25 per cent., and the first year, 1856, is intermediate with 30 per cent.

We find that out of the 31 deaths 20 occurred in India, 4 in Europe, and 1 in Australia, and in the case of 6 persons the place of death is unknown.

In the following list the name, standing, last appointment, salary, province, and cause of removal are given of all those whose names have been removed from the list of the years 1856 to 1860:—

It will be seen that the last two years have a much higher percentage of losses than the year 1858, which in 24 years has lost only one-third of its numbers.

(4) Since 1882 G. Robertson has retired, none have died. (5) Since 1882 J. Monro has retired, none died. (6) Since 1882 D. M. Gardner has retired and C. J. Powlett retires shortly; J. S. Armstrong and F. Jones are dead. (7) In this year none have died or retired since 1882.

If we now pass on from totals to individuals, we miss many a well-known name, while at the same time we find many who died or resigned so early in their career that they never became known in India at all.

In 1856 there were 20 appointments, and of those who came out 10 have died or retired and 10 still remain. Those who are dead are :—(1) Wells Butler, the senior competitioner, who died at Shergatti in Lower Bengal on the 20th June, 1859, only two years after he had come out. He was an officer of the highest promise and his death was greatly regretted. (2) Wilfred Lucas Healy, who, after rising to be Inspector-General of Jails in Bengal, died in May, 1876, at 20 years' service. (3) R. H. M. Warrand, died at Etáwah, N.-W. P., in October, 1865; he was an able man and a writer of brilliant vers de societé, but he never did himself justice. (4) R. H. Pomeroy, died at Benares in August, 1857, a few months after he came out. (5) Herbert Wilson, a Settlement Officer of great promise, died at Fatehgarh in June, 1866, at 10 years' standing. (6) C. Daly, died in February, 1863, in the Bombay Presidency. The four who have retired are : (1) W. Cornell, who rose to be a District Judge in Lower Bengal, and was for 25 years the senior competitioner in the service owing to Wells Butler's death. He retired in November, 1881. (2) T. H. Thornton C.S.I., the well-known Secretary to the Panjáb Government, who was afterwards a Judge of the Lahore Chief Court and Officiating Foreign Secretary. He retired in September, 1881. (3) Henry Bell, retired in December, 1877, after becoming Superintendent of Legal Affairs in Calcutta; he is practising as a barrister there. (4) W. G. Podder, the well-known Municipal Commissioner of Bombay, who retired in May, 1879, and is now the Revenue Secretary to the India Office.

In 1857 there were 20 appointments, and of those who came out 12 have died or retired and only 8 still remain. The five who are dead are :—(1) H. D. Sweeting, a great mathematician, who died in August, 1858, at Rangpur, only a year after coming out. (2) T. Walton, who became Judge of Faridpur in Lower Bengal and died there in October, 1876. (3) J. W. S. Wyllie, the brilliant Under-Secretary in the Foreign Department, who resigned in 1869 with the intention of entering Parliament, but who failed in his attempt and died in 1870. (4) A. B. II.

We have now traced the history of all those who belong to the first five years and who have left the service either by death or retirement, and it is time to turn to the living and to see how the survivors have fared. In India, although certain posts carry with them more repute than others, still the only practical measure of success is pay, and in estimating the comparative success which has attended those who still remain as survivals of the earlier ages of competition, the only practical test we can use is this. It is, of course, merely a measure of their official success; any literary, scientific or other reputation they may have acquired, and even any honorific distinctions, such as C.S.I.s and C.I.E.s, are here left out of consideration. Of course, a Civilian's salary depends also on his standing in the service; so if we divide his monthly pay by the number of years he has served, we obtain a rough estimate of the official appreciation of his merits. Thus Sir C. Aitchison is of 26 years' service and receives Rs. 8,333 a month; his "figure of merit" is therefore 321; and as this is nearly double that of the competitioner who comes next to him in merit (Hon. C. D. Field with 189), we may conclude that he has easily distanced all his competitors.

A list is appended of the surviving Civilians year by year, which gives the province in which they are serving, the appointment they now hold, the salary they receive, and the proportion it bears to the number of years they have served. From this we find that in the first year, 1856, Sir C. Aitchison is the most successful with 321, and Mr. J. Reynolds (Member of the Revenue Board in Calcutta) and W. Brittain Jones (the new Resident at Hyderabad) are equal next with 154 each. Of the men of 1857 Mr. C. A. Elliott, C.S.I., the Chief Commissioner of Assam, is the most fortunate with 160, while Mr. C. Robertson, Secretary to the N.-W. P. Government, is a bad second with 120, and Mr. Quinton and Mr. A. Smith, the Commissioners respectively of Allahabad and Orissa, are third with 117 each. In 1858 Mr. C. H. T. Crosthwaite, the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces and Member of the Governor-General's Legislative Council, is an easy first with 160; while for the second place (146) Mr. D. G. Barkley and Mr J. W. Smith both Judges of the Chief Court of the Panjáb, are equal. In 1859 Mr. Tyrrell, Officiating Judge of the High Court, N.-W. P., is first with 157; and Mr. D. Fitzpatrick, Secretary to the Government of India in the Legislative Department, is second with 152. In the last year, 1860, the Hon. C. D. Field, Judge of the High Court, Calcutta, is first with 189; but Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I., Agent of the Governor-General in Central India, runs him hard with 182, Mr. H. L. Harrison, Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, being a bad third with 136. (12)

It is also interesting to compare the success of the various competitors in after-life with their success in the examinations of their youth; a list is therefore given of all the above Civilians arranged in order of merit (according to the test of proportion of salary to years of service), and with the places they took in the open competitive and the final examinations in England; but in the first three years, 1856-57-58, there were no final examinations, so in those years the places in the open competition can alone be given. From this we find that the first of all, Sir C. Aitchison, was 6 out of 20 in his year, a good but not a remarkably high place. The second, Mr. Justice Field, was 22nd out of 40, a little more than half way down the list; while the third, Sir Lepel Griffin, was 18th in the same year. The fourth, Mr. C. A. Elliott, was 14 out of 20, and the fifth, Mr. C. Crosthwaite, was 9th out of 12, both of them well into the 2nd half of the list. In the sixth, Mr. Justice Tyrrell, who was 3rd out of 20, we come to the first of the now successful Civilians who was also very high in the competitive examination; but it may be stated at once that the reason why none of those who were highest in the competitions appear in this list is that the first and second in the competitions of each year have all died or retired except Mr. Beveridge, who was first in 1858; by a curious fatality the 3rd is the highest survivor in each year with that one exception, and the third men are Mr. Reynolds now 2nd in his year, Mr. Young, now 5th, Mr. Monro now 4th, Mr. Tyrrell now 1st, and Sir W. Wedderburn now 7th.

III.

If we analyse the whole list in one, we find that out of the 55 Civilians—

1 (Sir C. Aitchison) receives more than Rs. 300 a month for every year of service.
0 receive between Rs. 200 and 300 for every year of service.
2 (Hon. C. D. Field and Sir L. Griffin) receive between Rs. 175 and 200.
6 receive between Rs. 150 and 175.
7 receive between Rs. 125 and 150.
26 receive between Rs. 101 and 125.
13 receive between Rs. 90 and 100.

55 total.

The half-way point in the list is between Nos. 27 and 28, who receive Rs. 114 and 109 respectively: so that we may say that an average Civilian receives (when over 20 years' standing) Rs. 112 a month for every year of service that he has completed. The first third of the list ends with Rs. 120 and the last third begins with Rs. 103; and one may reckon that a fortunate man receives from Rs. 120 to 150 a month for every year's service, an average man receives from Rs. 103 to 120 a month, and an unlucky man receives from Rs. 90 to 120. If any one receives less than Rs. 90 or more than 150, he may reckon himself respectively very unfortunate or very fortunate, for both cases are quite exceptional. Any Civilian can test his own position in this way, but the test does not apply to those of less than 15 years' service.

If, on the other hand, we analyse the list year by year separately as it is given in the above table and apply the above test, we find that in the first year, 1856, the 10 survivors may be grouped as follows:—

Very highly paid ...	Sir C. Aitchison ...	More than Rs. 150.
	H. J. Reynolds ...
	W. B. Jones ...
Highly paid ...	R. West ...	Between Rs. 120 and 150.
	J. B. Poile (16) ...
Average ...	None ...	Between Rs. 103 and 119.
Below average ...	J. G. Cordery(17) ...	Between Rs. 90 and 102.
	H. E. Perkins ...
	W. Ramsay ...

The same classification is made for the others years in the first column of the preceding table to avoid repeating the names, &c., over again.

We have now, therefore, sketched the history and ending of the career of those Civilians of the years 1856 to 1860 who have already left the service by death and retirement; and we have given a list of those who still remain in the service, with their pay and appointments, and analysed this so as to show who, at the end of from 22 to 26 years' service, may be considered fortunate, average, and unfortunate. It is hoped that this paper will show some facts and results with regard to the competition service which were not known or realized before; and it is believed that it is for the interest of the great experiment which the British nation have now been trying for 26 years in governing their greatest colony that these facts and results should be as widely known as possible, both to guide those who may think of adopting the Indian Civil Service as a career, and to help those who have to decide whether the present system of recruiting the Service has been a success or whether it requires modification in any way. It may be said in conclusion that, though many have fallen by the way—and the dangers of an Indian career can hardly be said to be exaggerated when 49 out 104 Civilians have vanished from the lists in 25 years (only 3 of whom have retired in the ordinary way on full pension at the end of 25 years' service) (18)—yet the survivors have in every way justified the system under which they were selected, and those who organised it have every reason to be proud of its results. Of the 55 Civilians still remaining in the Service not a single one has been retarded in his promotion or disqualified in any way, and even the least fortunate are all holding Judgeships and Collectorships, the highest appointments to which they could rise in the ordinary line of the Service. That there should not be even one man out of 55 who was considered disqualified for a Judgeship or the charge of a district is beyond doubt a thing of which the competition service may well be proud. Having thus traced the careers of the Civilians of the first five years of the service, we hope before long to give a similar account of the next five years, or 1861 to 1865, and meantime we may summarise the results of the present inquiry as follows :—

(15) Mr. Birdwood is now Offg. Judge of the High Court, Bombay, on Rs. 3,750. (16) Mr. Poile now a Member of Council on Rs. 6,120. (17) Mr. Cordery is now Resident at Haidarabad on Rs. 6,000.

(1.) The death-rate among the competition Civilians for an average of 24 years is 30 per cent.

(2.) The losses by both deaths and retirements during the same period amount to 47 per cent.

(3.) The Indian Civil Service is composed now of 88 per cent. of competitioners and 12 per cent. of Haileybury Civilians, who number 118 in all.(19)

(4.) In the first 5 years of the competition system (1856-60) 104 appointments to the Service were made. Of these 104 persons 55 are still in the Service, 31 are dead, and 18 have retired, or 49 in all.

(5.) The highest percentage of deaths has occurred among the men of 1859, of whom 35 per cent. are dead.

(6.) If a Civilian belong to the first 5 years, i.e., 1856-60, he will draw :—

Rs. 90 to Rs. 102	a month	for every	year's	service,	if unfortunate.
„ 103 to „ 119	„	„	„	„	if average.
„ 120 to „ 150	„	„	„	„	if fortunate.
„ Above „ 150	„	„	„	„	if very fortunate.

(7.) Official success is best estimated by the proportion which an officer's salary bears to the number of years he has been in the service, and this proportion may be called his "figure of merit."

(8.) If so tested, the most fortunate Civilians of 1856-60 are—

(1)	Sir C. U. Aitchison, K.C.S.I., with	...	321
(2)	Mr. Justice C. D. Field with	...	189
(3)	Sir Lepel Griffin, K.C.S.I., with	...	182

(9.) All those who were 1st and 2nd in the open competitions of those years have died and retired except Mr. Beveridge, who was 1st in 1858; but all those who were 3rd in the open competition are still in the Service and are in the first half of the successful list, except one man.

(10.) The 55 Civilians still remaining may be classified thus :—

1 above	Rs. 200	a month	for every	year of service	extraordinarily fortunate.
8 between	„ 150	and 200	„	„	very fortunate.
10 „	„ 120	„ 150	„	„	fortunate.
19 „	„ 103	„ 119	„	„	average.
17 „	„ 90	„ 102	„	„	below average.
55 total.

(11.) An average Civilian receives Rs. 112 a month (when over 20 years' standing) for every year of service completed, and a Civilian may consider himself fortunate or unfortunate as his salary ranges above or below that standard.

(12.) Only 3 competition Civilians have as yet retired on full pension on completion of 25 years' service and 21 years' residence.(20)

(13.) No Civilian out of the 55 remaining has been retarded in his promotion, and all have reached the grade of Judge or Magistrate of a district.

IV.—Number of fortunate men in the whole Competition Service.

There are at present 781 competition Civilians in the Service.(21) These may be divided into three classes, viz.—I. The Fortunate, who draw more than Rs. 120 a month for every year of service. II. The Average, who draw from Rs. 90 to Rs. 120. III. The Unfortunate who draw less than Rs. 90. We at present have to deal only with the first class, i.e., those who draw

(18) The figures now (1884) are "57 out of 104 Civilians have vanished from the lists in 32 years, only 8 of whom have retired on full pension". (19) Now 64 Haileybury and 836 competition, or 10 per cent. of the former and 90 per cent. of the latter. (20) The number is now 9. (21) Now 836.

more than Rs. 120 a month for every year of service. There are 93 of these, and they may again be sub-divided into the following grades :—

		No.
I.—Extraordinarily fortunate, who draw above Rs.	180	6
II.—Very fortunate " " " "	150	19
III.—Decidedly fortunate " " " "	130	36
IV.—Fortunate(22) " " " "	120	12
Total	... ...	93

If we examine these in detail, we find that the 25 extraordinarily and very fortunate are thus distributed :—

PROVINCE.		No.
Government of India		13
Lower Bengal		5
British Burmah		2
Central Provinces...		2
Bombay		1
N.-W. Provinces		1
Assam		1
	Total ...	25

It is therefore clear that the belief that the Government of India is the best paymaster is well-founded, and Lower Bengal is obviously next. Madras and the Panjáb have no place in this list.

The 51 extraordinarily, very, and decidedly fortunate are thus distributed in the different provinces :—

Extraordinarily and very.	Decidedly.	Total.	Percentage.	Province.
13	5	18	35	Government of India.
5	5	10	19	Lower Bengal.
1	5	6	12	Bombay.
2	4	6	12	Central Provinces.
2	1	3	6	British Burmah.
1	2	3	6	N.-W. P.
...	3	3	6	Panjáb.
1	...	1	2	Assam.
...	1	1	2	Madras.
25	26	51	100

We see from this table that the Government of India still maintains its marked predominance with 35 per cent., while Bengal is still next with 19 per cent.; but Bombay is now 3rd instead of British Burmah, the Central Provinces remaining 4th as before. The N.-W. P. and the Panjáb count only 3 each among the "very and decidedly fortunate," and Madras and Assam count only one each.

Of the 42 who are only classed as "fortunate—"

Percentage.	Actual No.
5	2	belong to the N.-W. P.
5	2	" to the Government of India.
45	19	" to Madras.
2	1	" to British Burmah.
17	7	" to Bombay.
2	1	" to Assam.
24	10	" to Bengal.
100	42 total.

In this table the percentages are changed in a very marked manner, for Madras which has hitherto been nowhere, now jumps to the top of the list with 45 per cent. of the appointments. Bengal is next with 24 per cent., and Bombay 3rd with 17 per cent. The Panjáb and the Central Provinces have none.

(22) Those tables have been omitted in reprinting, as they have totally changed since 1882; but the tables of fortunate men in each province have been retained, as they show the state of promotion in each province in 1882 and also to some extent its present state.

If we now combine the three grades of good fortune into one table, we shall be better able to ascertain the position of the different provinces as regards the proportion of the fortunate competitioners which each possesses :—

Extraordinarily and very fortunate.	Decidedly fortunate.	Fortunate.	Total.	Province.
13	5	2	20	Government of India.
5	5	10	20	Bengal.
...	1	19	20	Madras.
1	5	7	13	Bombay.
2	4	...	6	Central Provinces.
1	2	2	5	N.-W. P.
2	1	1	4	British Burmah.
...	3	...	3	Panjáb.
1	...	1	2	Assam.
25	26	42	23	Total.

From this we see that the Government of India, Bengal, and Madras each possess about 20 per cent. of the fortunate Civilians, but the Government of India has the large majority in the two higher classes, while Madras has all but one in the lowest; in Bengal they are more equally distributed. Every province is represented more or less, but the Panjáb is the most unfortunate with only three in the 2nd class and none in the 1st or 3rd.

VI.—Percentage of Fortunate out of total number of Civilians in each Province.

In considering the good or bad fortune of each province, we must of course not only count the actual number of fortunate Civilians serving in each province, but the number of fortunate as compared with the total number of competition Civilians in that province, i.e., the percentage of fortunate officers, which is the real test of a province's good or bad position from a Civilian's point of view.

The total number of competition Civilians in each province is as follows :—

Order.	Province.	No.	Percentage of the whole.
1	Bengal	183	23·4
2	N.-W. Provinces...	154	19·7
3	Madras	133	17·0
4	Bombay	125	16·0
5	Panjáb	83	10·6
6	Government of India	35	4·5
7	British Burmah	24	3·1
8	Central Provinces	23	3·0
	Total ...	781	100·0

And if we compare the number of "fortunate" Civilians with the total number in each province, we obtain the following results :—

No.	Total number of Civilians.	Number of fortunate.	Percentage.	Province.
1	35	20	57·1	Government of India.
2	23	6	26·0	Central Provinces.
3	24	4	16·6	British Burmah.
4	133	20	15·0	Madras.
5	183	20	11·0	Bengal.
6	125	13	10·0	Bombay.
7	21	2	9·5	Assam.
8	83	3	3·6	Panjáb.
9	154	5	3·3	North-West Provinces.
Total ...	781	93	11·9

We now see that, though the Government of India still maintains its place at the head of the list and has not only the largest actual number of fortunate Civilians, but also double the percentage of fortunate ones that any other Government has, yet the other provinces change in a very marked manner the order they had in the other table. When we take our figures from this comparative table, we find that the Government of India is by far the first with 37 per cent. of "fortunate" ones, or more than double of the next in the list; the Central Provinces is clearly second with 26 per cent.; British Burmah and Madras come third with 16 and 15 per cent.; while Bengal, Bombay, and Assam have only about 10 per cent., and the Panjáb and North-Western Provinces only 3 per cent.

It should also be added that there are 14 Civilians of the year 1862 in Madras, who are all drawing Rs. 2,333 a month, and fall only slightly below the standard of Rs. 120 a month for every year of service, i.e., their figure of merit is 116·5; and, if these were reckoned, Madras would have 34 "fortunate" ones, or 25·6 per cent. of all its appointments, and would rank third in the list of provinces instead of fourth, being then almost as fortunate as British Burmah. The inequalities thus shown to exist in the different provinces are very striking, and it is certainly a great anomaly that a Civilian who is attached to the North-West Provinces or the Panjáb has only one-third as good a chance of drawing specially high pay as one who goes to Assam, Bombay, and Bengal, and only one-fifth as good a chance as if he went to Madras, British Burmah, or the Central Provinces, although we must admit that the position occupied numerically by the latter province is exceptional, and does not represent its real chances, as it is due to three or four very lucky men who hold high appointments, some of them only temporarily. The mass of Civilians in the Central Provinces are, on the contrary, very unlucky, although they, perhaps, scarcely emulate the Panjáb in that respect.

The Central Provinces, Assam, and Burmah are small provinces, where the percentages are easily altered by one or two men's good or bad fortune, and the Government of India is, of course, in an exceptional position with regard to the other Governments; so that the only way to obtain a really accurate estimate of the comparative good or bad fortune of different provinces is to take the five great provinces which have a large number of Civilians attached to them, and in which the figures are more permanent and less likely to be deranged by one or two exceptional appointments. If we do this we find the figures are :—

Number.	Total number of Civilians.	Number of fortunate.	Percentage.	Province.
1	133	20	15	Madras.
2	183	20	11	Bengal.
3	125	13	10	Bombay.
4	83	3	3·6	Panjáb.
5	154	5	3·6	North-West Provinces.
Total,	678	61	9

These figures represent the real chances of promotion to highly-paid appointments, and we find that Madras is much above the average, Bengal and Bombay slightly above the average, and the North-West Provinces and Panjáb very much below the average. There would appear to be little doubt that the introduction of graded Magistracies and Judgeships in the North-West Provinces and the low scale of pay for Deputy Commissioners in the Panjáb has done much to cause the absence of any high salaries among the Civilians in those provinces, but it must be remembered that the average rate of pay in a province may be fairly high, while the absence of exceptionally fortunate men keeps its percentage in the above table very low, and this is believed to be at any rate partially the case in the North-West Provinces.

VII.—Percentage of Fortunate in each Year of the Competition.

If we examine the results year by year instead of province by province, we find that they are as follows:—

Year.	Number of Civilians sent out.	Number of fortunate.	Percentage of fortunate to total.	Order.
1856	20	6	30	2
1857	20	1	5	13
1858	12	5	42	1
1859	20	2	10	11
1860	32	6	19	5
1861	68	2	3	14
1862	61	11	18	6
1863	91	21	23	3
1864	52	8	15·4	7
1865	36	1	2·8	15
1866	0	0	0	18
1867	45	9	20	4
1868	39	4	10·3	10
1869	47	4	9	12
1870	41	6	15	8
1871	47	5	11	9
1872	40	1	2·5	17
1873	36	1	2·8	16
Total ...	707	95	...	...

From this table we see that the most fortunate year is 1858, which has 42 per cent. of fortunate men in it, and the next is 1856 with 30 per cent.; the most unfortunate is 1872 with only 2·5 per cent., and the next most unfortunate are 1865 and 1873 with only 2·8 per cent.; but the years 1872 and 1873 are too recent to have got up to their full percentage as yet.

The most unfortunate of the older years are 1865 and 1861 with only 2·8 and 3 per cent., and next most unfortunate is 1857 with only 5 per cent. The earlier years vary very markedly, for while 1856 has 30 per cent. and 1858 42 per cent., 1860 has only 19 per cent. and 1859 and 1857 only 10 and 5 per cent. respectively.

If we classify the years according to their percentage, we find they they fall as follows:—

	Year.
Very unfortunate under 5 per cent.	1872, 1865, 1873, 1861.
Unfortunate under 10 per cent....	1867, 1869.
Rather unfortunate under 15 per cent.	1859, 1868, 1871.
Average under 20 per cent.	1870, 1864, 1862, 1860.
Rather fortunate under 25 per cent.	1867, 1863.
Fortunate with 30 per cent.	1856.
Very fortunate with 42 per cent.	1858.

VIII.—Permanent good and bad fortune not always shown accurately in the preceding tables.

It must always be remembered that all that the preceding tables profess to show is the good or bad fortune of a particular officer, a particular province, or a particular year at the present time. They do not profess to show which officer, province, or year has had the best or worst fortune throughout the whole time the competition system has lasted. Thus it is, of course, quite possible that an officer should have been very fortunate, indeed, throughout the greater part of his career, and that he would be amongst the highest if his total salary could be reckoned against that of others; while at the same time, owing to increasing seniority or bad luck late in his career, he may not at the present moment appear among the fortunate ones at all.

It would, of course, be an almost impossible task to take out each competition Civilian's salary from the Service registers and arrange them all according to total salaries they have drawn, though this would be the only way of ascertaining with perfect accuracy the relative position as regards good fortune in pay of each Civilian with every other. But though the labour of compiling a complete list of this kind would be greater than the value of the results to be expected from it, an attempt in the same direction can be made by taking a few typical instances, i.e., one or two officers from each province, and then ascertaining exactly what pay each has drawn throughout the whole of his career.

This attempt has been made in the following table, which shows what pay each of four officers (one being chosen from each of the four great provinces) has drawn in each year of his service, and the total pay drawn by each. The officers are all, of course, of one year (1862), and in each province an officer with average fortune has been taken, who may be considered a fair representative of the officers of that year. To these four columns has been added a fifth showing the salary drawn by a special officer in the N.-W. P., who, as will be seen, has drawn in all Rs. 63,000 more pay than the average officer of that province, and yet as Rs. 53,000 short of the pay drawn by the average Madras officer, and Rs. 16,000 short of the pay drawn by the average Bengal officer, and is only Rs. 16,000 above the pay drawn by the average Bombay officer.

Figures with asterisks refer to periods when the officer was on furlough, and therefore drawing half the average pay of the previous three years, subject to the maximum limit.

IX.—Comparative total salaries in the different Provinces.

We find that the total salaries come in the following order:—

		Rs.
1.	Average Madras officer	3,03,453
2.	,, Bengal ,, ...	2,66,062
3.	Special N. W. P. ,, ...	2,50,978
4.	Average Bombay ,, ...	2,34,938
5.	,, N.-W. P. ,, ...	1,88,691

and if we divide the total salary by the number of years served, we shall get the permanent figure of merit, just as in the previous tables we obtained the present figure of merit by dividing the present salary by the number of years served.

We thus obtained the following results:—

No.	Province.	Total salary.	No. of years served.	Average annual salary.	Permanent figure of merit.
		Rs.		Rs.
1	Average Madras	3,03,453	19	16,971	100
2	,, Bengal	2,66,062	19	14,003	140
3	Special N.-W. P.	2,50,978	19	13,209	132
4	Average Bombay	2,34,938	19	12,365	124
5	,, N.-W. P.	1,88,691	19	9,931	99

The permanent figure of merit is, of course, the average annual salary drawn throughout an officer's whole service, and we see that this is very nearly represented by the figures 16, 14, 13, 12, and 10 for the above five instances.

The average pay is, of course, affected by the amount of furlough an officer has had, but in these instances this does not vary much, the average N.-W. P. and Bombay officers having had three years each, Madras four years, and the Bengal and the special N.-W. officers two years. These latter are therefore somewhat at a disadvantage in the comparison, for their comparatively high totals are partly the result not of high pay, but of shortness of furlough.

If we examine the totals of annual salary (excluding the special N.-W. officer for the present), we find that in the first four years the Bombay officer drew most salary, but in the fifth year the Madras officer passed him and remains first till the twelfth year, when the Bengal officer obtains the lead, which however he loses again next year (thirteenth) and the Madras officer retains the first place for the remaining six years (except when on furlough), while in the fifteenth and sixteenth years the Madras officer was drawing nearly double the salary of any of his contemporaries, and this without obtaining any appointment out of the regular line.

The N.-W. officer draws the least salary from the second to the sixteenth year, when he passes the Bombay officer only. The respective excess or deficit of salary drawn by each officer as compared with the others is shown in this table :—

Bombay is to	— 68,515	—31,124	—16,040	...	+46,247
Average N.-W. P. is to ...	—1,14,762	—77,371	—62,287	+46,247	...

This is to be read thus Madras is to Bengal + 37,391, i.e., the Madras officer has drawn Rs. 37,391 more salary than the Bengal one; Bengal is to Bombay 31,124, i.e., the Bengal officer has drawn Rs. 31,124 more salary than the Bombay one; and so on for each instance.

The excessively high salaries drawn by Madras officers of that year do not, of course, apply to all Madras officers; on the contrary, a Madras officer low down in the list of the year 1864 has almost certainly drawn less salary than a Bengal or Bombay officer, and probably as little as an average N.-W. P. officer. It must therefore be remembered that this table is only intended to compare the total salaries (for 19 years) of officers of that particular year, 1862.

STATISTICS OF THE YEARS 1861 TO 1865.

X.—Deaths and retirements in those years.

We now proceed to redeem the promise given at the end of part III. that we would give a similar account of the years 1861 to 1865 to that already given of the years 1856 to 1860.

None of the Civilians of 1861 to 1865 are as yet entitled to retire on their full pension, and the retirements will therefore be found to be less than in the earlier years.

In the second five years of the competitive system 308 officers were appointed. Of these 70 (or 23 per cent.) are dead or have retired and 238 (or 77 per cent.) are still in the Service. The figures for the five years are :—

	1861.	1862.	1863.	1864.	1865.	Total.
Number of appointments ...	68	61	91	52	36	308
Ditto deaths and retirements ...	16	12	26	9	7	70
Percentage of deaths and retirements...	23·5	19·6	28·6	17·3	19·5	22·7
Number of deaths	14	6	18	8	4	50
Ditto retirements	2	6	8	1	3	20
Percentage of deaths	20·6	9·8	19·8	15·5	11·1	16·2
Ditto retirements... ...	2·9	9·8	8·8	1·8	8·4	6·5

We thus find that the highest percentage of deaths is 20·6 in 1861, the earliest year, but the next, 19·8, is in 1863. The healthiest years are 1862 with only 9·9 per cent. and 1865 with 11·1 per cent. Out of the 50 deaths, 39 occurred in India and 11 in Europe. The highest pertage of losses by both death and retirement is 28·6 in 1863, or nearly a third of the whole; and the next is 23·5 in 1861. The lowest is 17·3 in 1864, and the next 19·5 in 1865.

In the following list the name, standing, last appointment, salary, province, and cause of removal are given of all those whose names have been removed from the list of the years 1861 to 1865 :—

J. Wallace.	J. B. Spedding.

(25) Since 1882, W. A. Happell, D. Brick, and T. B. Hardinge have retired in Madras on proportionate pensions and J. M. Peters and E. Cordeaux have died. (26) None of this year have died or retired since 1882.

XI.—Details of deaths and retirements in each year.

If we now examine each year separately, we find that in 1861 there were 68 appointments, and of these 14 have died, and 2 have retired, or 16 (or 23·5 per cent.) in all. Of the 14 who died, 8 came from Lower Bengal, 4 from the North-West Provinces (1, H. F. Tyrrell, on his way home), 1 from Madras, and 1 from Bombay. The best known of these are J. C. Geddes, the Comtist and philosophical writer, who died, when Judge of Muzaffarpur, in 1880; J. S. Carstairs, Magistrate of Rajshahye; and Valentine Irwin, Magistrate of Kattak, who both died in 1873; J. G. Robertson a well-known settlement officer in the N.-W. P., who also died in the same year; and F. Thelwall, who died at Kandesh.

The two who resigned are W. T. Baldwin, who retired after 6 years' service in the N.-W. P.; C. E. C. Merington, who, after 12 years' service in Lower Bengal, threw up the Service and retired on an invalid pension.

In 1862 there were 61 appointments, and of these 6 have died and 6 have resigned, or 12 (or 19·6 per cent.) in all. Of the 6 who died, 4 came from Lower Bengal, 1 from the N.-W. P., and 1 from Madras. Of the 6 who resigned, 4 came from Madras and 2 from the N.-W. P.

Of those the best known are H. M. Rogers, a settlement officer in the N.-W. P., who retired in 1873 on account of bad health; and T. W. Gribble, who died of cholera in Calcutta when Postmaster-General of Bengal.

In 1863 there were 91 appointments (the largest number ever given), and of these 18 have died and 8 have retired, or 26 (or 28·6 per cent.) in all. Of the 18 who died, 6 were from the N.-W. P., 4 from Madras, 4 from Bengal 2 from Bombay, and 2 from the Panjáb. All died in India except 2- W. E. Kinsey at Alexandria and W. E. Souttar in England. Of the 8 who resigned, 5 came from Bengal, 2 from Bombay, and 1 from the N.-W. P.

Of those the best known are G. Butt, Secretary to the Board of Revenue at Allahabad, who died suddenly in January, 1879; W. E. Kinsey, Judge of the S. C. Court at Mussoorie, who died at Alexandria, on his way home, in 1874; W. M. Souttar, the Calcutta Commissioner of Police and Chairman of the Municipality, who died in England last year; C. F. Magrath, Magistrate of Faridpur, who died at Madras, on his way home, in 1881; E. H. Harrison, the Registrar of the Chief Court at Lahore, who died in 1875; and C. J. Crosthwaite, the Collector of Kistna, in Madras, who died there in 1881.

In 1864 there were 52 appointments, and of these 8 have died and 1 has retired, or 9 (or 17·3 per cent.) in all. Of the 8 who died, 3 were from Bombay, 2 from Madras, 1 from the Panjáb, 1 from Bengal, and 1 from Mysore (G. I.) All died in India except H. W. Wellesley from Mysore, who died in England. The one who resigned was from Madras.

Of these the best known are A. Lyon, who published several works on legal subjects and died on the voyage home in 1877; H. W. Wellesley, who was Secretary to the Chief Commissioner of Mysore and who died in England after a long illness in 1878; and C. J. Knox, the Collector of Kistna, who died in the Red Sea in 1881. In 1865 there were 36 appointments, and of these 4 have died and 3 have retired, or 7 (or 19·5 per cent.) in all. Of the 4 who died 3 were from the N.-W. P. and 1 from Madras. All died in India except G. E. Low, who died in London immediately after his arrival from India. Of the three who resigned, 1 was from the Panjab, 1 from Madras, and 1 from British Burmah.

Of these the best known are G. E. Low, Officiating Sanitary Commissioner of the N.-W. P., who, after a long illness in India, died on reaching London in 1875; T. F. Harkness, who died suddenly, when Officiating Magistrate of Muzaffarnagar, in 1879; and S. F. A. Smith, who, after serving for several years in the N.-W. P., was transferred to British Burmah and after long ill-health resigned in 1879.

XII.—Deaths and retirements in each province.

If we now tabulate these results according to the different provinces to which the officers were attached, we shall find that the deaths and retirements were distributed as follows:—

Year.		Bengal.	N.-W. P.	Panjáb.	Bombay.	Madras.	British Burmah.	Government of India.	Total.
1861	Deaths	8	4	...	1	1	...	...	14
	Retirements	1	1	...	...	...	...	...	2
	Total ...	9	5	...	1	1	...	...	16
1862	Deaths	4	1	...	...	1	...	...	6
	Retirements	...	2	...	...	4	...	...	6

Year.		Bengal.	N.-W. P.	Panjáb.	Bombay.	Madras.	Burmah.	Government of India.	Total.
1863	Deaths	4	6	2	2	4	...	...	18
	Retirements	5	1	...	2	...	...	...	8
	Total ...	9	7	2	4	4	...	...	26
1864	Deaths	1	...	1	3	2	...	1	8
	Retirements	...	...	...	...	1	...	...	1
	Total ...	1	...	1	3	3	...	1	9
1865	Deaths	...	3	...	...	1	...	...	4
	Retirements	...	...	1	...	1	1	...	3
	Total ...	...	3	1	...	2	1	...	7
	Total of 5 years ...	23	18	4	8	15	1	1	70

But in order to judge which province is the healthiest it will, of course, be necessary to give not only the actual number of deaths and retirements, but also the percentage on the total number of Civilians of these years employed in each province. This is shown in the following table, in which the first line gives the total number employed, the second the number of deaths and retirements, and the third the percentage of deaths, &c., on the number employed:—

	C. P.	Assam.	Bengal.	N.-W. P.	Panjáb.	Bombay.	Madras.	Burmah.	Government of India.	Total.
Total number of Civilians, 1861-65 ...	6	4	78	69	31	31	72	4	13	308
Number of deaths and retirements ...	...	...	23	18	4	8	15	1	1	74
Percentage of deaths, &c., to total number,	...	...	29·5	26·1	12·9	25·8	20·8	25	7·7	22·0

We find from this table that the order of the provinces according to the proportion of deaths and retirements is:—

Bengal	29·5
N.-W. Provinces	26·1
Bombay	25·8
Burmah	25·0
Madras	20·8
Panjáb	12·9
Government of India	7·7
All provinces	22·4

The Central Provinces and Assam cannot be compared with the others, as no deaths or retirements have occurred in these provinces among the Civilians of 1861-65. But of the remaining provinces we see that Bengal, N.-W. P., Bombay, and Burmah are all about the same, with 25 per cent. of deaths and retirements in an average period of 19 years; Madras is decidedly healthier with 20 per cent. and the Panjáb twice as healthy with 13 per cent.; while among the Civilians attached to the Government of India the casualties have been only 7·7 per cent. in the same period.

The total proportion for all India is 22·4 per cent., or 1·18 per cent. per annum.

The distribution of Civilians among the different provinces in each year is shown in the following table, and it certainly exhibits extraordinary variations :—

Province.	1861.	1862.	1863.	1864.	1865.	Total.
Bengal	31	14	21	6	6	78
N.-W. Provinces	27	12	18	1	11	69
Madras	2	19	27	19	5	72
Government of India	1	7	1	2	2	13
Assam	1	2	1	...	...	4
Punjab	4	2	12	9	4	31
Bombay	2	4	9	9	7	31
Burmah	...	...	1	2	1	4
Central Provinces	...	1	1	4	...	6
Total ...	68	61	91	52	36	308

Thus in Bengal only 12 officers were sent out in 1864-65, while 45 arrived in 1861-62. In the N.-W. P. the numbers were respectively 12 and 39, or nearly as great a disproportion. In Madras 65 officers were sent out in the three years 1862-63-64 and only 7 officers in the other two years, 1861 and 1865: thus the last Civilian of 1864 is 65 places below the first Civilian of 1862, although there is only two years' difference between them, and the whole Madras Service only consists of 160 members. This difference of 65 places means approximately 12 years' difference in promotion, instead of 2 to 3 years as it should be. So in the Punjab 21 officers were posted to it in 1863-4, and only 10 in the remaining three years, and in Bombay 18 in 1863-64 against 13 in the remaining three years. These inequalities of supply are now carefully avoided, but their effects will be felt for many years yet.

XIII.—The survivors of the years 1861-65.

We have traced the history of all those of the second five years who have retired or died, and we have now to see what has become of the survivors.

Applying the same method of gauging official success as we used in Part II. for the years 1856-60, i.e., dividing each Civilian's salary by the number of years he has served, we find that of the 308 Civilians who came out from 1861 to 1865, the most fortunate, i.e., the one who has the highest figure of merit determined in the above manner, is Mr. D. M. Barbour, the Financial Secretary to the Government of India, who draws Rs. 4,166 at 19 years' standing, and whose figure of merit is therefore 219; the second is Mr. J. Westland, the Comptroller-General, who draws Rs. 3,500 (26) at 20 years' standing, and whose figure is therefore 175; and equal with him is Mr. A. Mackenzie, Home Secretary to the Government of India, who also draws Rs. 3,500 (26) at 20 years' standing. We also find that the most successful men in each year are :—

Year.	Name.	Province.	Pay.	Figure of merit.	Appointment.
			Rs.
1861 ...	J. O'Kinealy ...	B.	3,000	171	Judge, High Court.
1862 ...	{ J. Westland ...	I.	3,500	175	Comptroller-General.
	{ A. Mackenzie ...	I.	3,500	175	Home Secretary to G. I.
1863 ...	D. M. Barbour ...	I.	4,166	219	Financial Secretary to G. I.
1864 ...	J. Jardine (Bo.) ...	B. B.	2,880	160	Judicial Commissioner, British Burmah.
1865 ...	A. D. Carey (Bo.)...	I.	2,300	135	Commissioner of Inland Customs.

Out of the six men (two being equal in 1862) who are first in each of these five years, we find that four belong to Lower Bengal and two to Bombay, but three out of the four Lower Bengal men are serving under the Government of India and the two Bombay men are both under the Government of India, one directly and one in the British Burmah. So that five out of the six first men of these years are serving under the Government of India and the sixth is in the Calcutta High Court, which, though it corresponds to the Provincial High Courts of other provinces, is administratively under the Government of India. If we take the six first men in the whole list for 1861-65, we find it consists of the same six names, except that Mr. Buck, Revenue Secretary to the Government of India, on Rs. 3,500, replaces Mr. Carey.

(26) Now Rs. 4,000.

XIV.—The fortunate Civilians of the first ten years.

4	W. J. Le Fanu ...	M.	1,944	115	Offg. Magistrate, 1st grade.

From this last list we find that in 1861 Mr. O'Kinealy is the most fortunate with 171, while Mr. Buck is close to him with 166. No one else is even above 120.

In 1862 Messrs. Westland and Mackenzie are equal first with 175 each, and Mr. Hunter third with 158. No others are above 140.

In 1863 Mr. Barbour is easily first with 219 (the highest figure in these 5 years), while Mr. R. J. Crosthwaite is next with 143. No others are above 140.

In 1864 Mr. J. Jardine is easily first with 160 No others are above 140, but Messrs. J. W. Neill, Venning, and Clogstoun are equal second with 130.

In 1865 no one has above 140. Mr. Carey is first with 135, and Mr. C. D. Maclean second with 127; the figures of this year are very low.

In the first five years of the competition system 104 officers were appointed to the service, and in the second five years 308 officers or 412 in the first ten years; and it may be mentioned that only 1 out of these 412 officers appointed by competition has had to be removed from the service during the whole period.

XV. Comparative success in the Examinations and in after-life.

In the following list the first thirty Civilians of 1856 to 1865 (i.e., all who got 135 or more) are given with their places in the open and final examinations in England in the same way as they were given for the years 1856 to 1860 in Chapter II :—

30	A. D. Carey	135	36	7	65	40

(32) To these must now be added Mr. Falle with 197; he was tenth in the open competition of the year of 1865.

We, therefore, find that in the 30 most fortunate Civilians of the first ten years (1856-65) there is only one who was first in the open competitions, Mr. Westland of 1862; but it must be remembered that only one of the first men (Mr. Beveridge) of the first five years survives; that in 1861 Mr. Giffard, the first man, resigned) without coming out to India; in 1863, Mr. T. W. Tolbert, the first man, is in the Panjáb, (33) where promotion is so slow that he is still only a Deputy Commissioner; in 1864 Mr. G. Smeaton, the first man, is dead, and in 1865 the first man, Mr. W. T. Martin, is still a Joint Magistrate in the North-Western Provinces. (34)

There is only one who was second in the open competitions, Mr. A. Mackenzie of 1862; but there are two who were thirds, Messrs. Tyrrell and Reynolds, and two fourths, Messrs. Barkley and J. W. Neill, one fifth, Mr. W. W. Hunter, and three sixths, Messrs. Aitchison, Barbour, and Fitzpatrick: so ten, or one-third of the whole, out of the first 30 in after-life, were among the first six of their year in the open competitions; while 13 out of the first 30 were not in the upper half at the open competitions of their year.

If we now return to the general list of those who came out from 1861 to 1865, we find that out of the 233 Civilians still in the Service—

1 (D. M. Barbour)	draws more than			Rs. 200 a month for each year of service—
6	...	draw between		„	150 and	200
13	...	„	„	„	130 „	149
24	...	„	„	„	120 „	129

40	...	„	„	„	80 „	89
10	...	„	„	„	70 „	79
9	...	„ less than		„	70
238 total.

The half-way point is at about Rs. 105, and all who draw more than that may consider themselves somewhat fortunate, while those who draw less than Rs. 100 decidedly unfortunate.

We have now only to summarize the results we have arrived at for the years 1861-65, and for the whole period of ten years (1856-65), as we did the results for 1856-50 at the end of Chapter III.

1. The death-rate among the competition Civilians for an average of 21 years (17 to 26) is 16·2 per cent.

2. The losses from both deaths and retirements during the same period amount to 22·7 per cent.

3. The Indian Civil Service is composed now (October, 1882) of about 90 per cent. of competitioners and 10 per cent. of Haileybury Civilians, who number 116 in all. (35)

4. In the first ten years of the competition system (1856-65) 412 appointments to the Service were made. Of these 412 persons 293 are still in the Service; 81 are dead and 38 have retired, or 119 in all. (36)

5. The highest percentage of deaths has occurred (1) in the first five years among the men of 1859, of whom 35 per cent. are dead; and (2) in the second five years among the men of 1863, of whom 19·8 per cent. are dead.

6. If a Civilian belong to the first ten years he will draw—

Rs. 70 to Rs. 100	a month for every year of service	if	unfortunate.
„ 100 to „ 110	„	„	average.
„ 110 to „ 150	„	„	fortunate.
Above „ 150	„	„	very fortunate.

7. The most fortunate Civilians of 1856-65 are—

(1) Sir C. U. Aitchison K.C.S.I.,	with Rs. 320		per mensem for each year of service. (37).
(2) D. M. Barbour	„ „ 219
(3) Hon. Justice C. D. Field	„ „ 189
(4) Sir L. H. Griffin, K.C.S.I.	„ „ 182

8. Of those who were first in the open competitions of 1856 to 1865, six have died or retired, and four—Mr. Beveridge (1857), Mr. Westland (1862), Mr. Tolbert (1863), and Mr. Martin (1865) are still in the Service. (38)

9. Of those who were second in the open competitions only three—Messrs. A. Mackenzie (1862), B. Purser (1864), and G. R. Williams (1865)—are still in the Service; the other seven are all either dead or retired.

(33) Mr. Tolbert has since died. (34) Mr Martin is still a Joint Magistrate in 1884, two years afterwards. (35) Now in 1884 there are 48 Haileybury to 276 competition. (36) In 1884 the figures are 412 appointed, 293 still in the Service; 147 left the Service, of which 93 are dead and 54 have retired. (37) Mr Pedie must now be added with 197. (38) In 1884 the figures are 7 have died and retired and 3 are still in the Service, Mr. Tolbert having died in 1882.

10. The 293 competition Civilians of the first ten years who are still in the Service may be classified thus:—

2 above Rs. 200 a month for every year of service, extraordinarily fortunate.
14 between Rs. 150 and Rs. 199 for every of service, very fortunate.
47 between Rs. 120 and Rs. 149 for every year of service, fortunate.
121 between Rs. 100 and Rs. 119 for every year of service, average.
50 between Rs. 90 and Rs. 99 for every year of service, below average.
59 between Rs. 50 and Rs. 90 for every year of service, very unfortunate.

11. A Civilian of the first ten years (1855-65) receives on an average Rs. 105 a month for every year of service he has completed, and he may be considered fortunate or unfortunate in the degree in which his salary ranges above or below that standard.

12. Only 3 competition Civilians have as yet retired on full pension (£1,000 a year; of this about £500 is paid for by the Civilian himself and £500 is contributed by Government) on completion of 25 years' service and 21 years' actual residence, but a fourth is believed to be about to retire. Including him, and as there were 40 appointments in the first two years (1856 and 1857) which alone are qualified for pension as yet, exactly 10 per cent. of the Civilians who have been in India long enough to qualify for pension have survived to take it and have been ready to take it as soon as qualified. (39)

13. Out of the 412 Civilians appointed to the Service in the first ten years only one has been removed from the Service, and out of the 293 still remaining in the Service none have been refused promotion, and all have reached the grade of Officiating Magistrate, Judge, or Deputy Commissioner. (40)

14. The supply of Civilians both to the whole of India and to each different province was not correctly adjusted during these ten years, it having varied from 12 in 1857 to 91 in 1863 for the whole of India; and from 27 in 1861 to 1 in 1864 in the N.-W. P., and from 27 in 1863 to 5 in 1865 in Madras. The inequalities in supply have resulted in a consequent inequality in promotion and salaries, which has been very inequitable for individuals and which has had a distinctly bad effect on the administration; but such inequalities are now very carefully avoided and are not at all likely to recur.

15. It cannot be said that the marked success of individuals in the open competitive examinations has invariably been a presage of official success in after-life; but of the 30 Civilians of the first ten years who are now most successful, 10 were in the first six at the competition of their year and 16 were in the first 15, while 17 were in the upper half, and only 9 were lower than 20; so that those who were highest in the examinations have decidedly done better afterwards than those who were lower.

Conclusion.—I have now given all the statistics with regard to the first ten years which I gave in the first part with regard to the first five years, and which I promised to extend to the second five years; and I have drawn from them the conclusions which seemed to me to be justified by the figures.

I can only hope that the examination which has here been made of the facts relating to the great experiment of competition, as applied to the Civil Service of India, may be of some use to those, both in India and in England, who are interested in the trial of it, which has now lasted 26 years, (41) and who believe in the principle of selection by open Competition which guided the founders of the present system.

To Robert Lowe (Lord Sherbrooke), Sir Charles Trevelyan, Lord Stanley (Earl of Derby), Sir Stafford Northcote, and Lord Macaulay we chiefly owe the creation of the system, which has not only proved a success for the object which was directly aimed at, viz., the supply of competent and even able recruits to the Indian Civil Service but has been equally or even more a benefit in the example it has set for other branches of the public service in India by establishing the system of selection by merit instead of that of nomination by interest, and by raising the standard of qualification required for the public service.

Only the other day the Viceroy extended the application of the principle of open competition to all the clerkships in the departments under the Government of India, and it is now practically in operation as regards most of the branches of the Subordinate Executive Service; for even where actual competition is not employed, the nominations are given only to those who have graduated in a university or otherwise distinguished themselves scholastically. (42)

In some departments, such as the Forests, Telegraph, Public Works, Medical, &c., all the higher appointments are given by open competition in England, just as they are for the Covenanted Civil Service; and this system should be undoubtedly extended to the other departments in which appointments are still given by nomination, such as the Educational, Police, Opium, Customs, Salt, Civil Judicial, Post Office, Financial, Jails, and Registration. Where these are to be officered by natives of India the open competitions should be held in India; but where Europeans are to be selected, the examinations should be held in England, and should be merely an extension of

(39) In 1884, the figures are 19 competition Civilians have retired on full pension, viz., 4 of 1856, 2 of 1857, 1 of 1858, and 4 of 1859 in these 4 years 72 Civilians were appointed, but 23 died before they had completed their Service, so 49 were left who could have retired, and of these 4 have actually done so or 18 per cent. only.
(40) In 1884 there are only 265 still in the Service, but the other figures still hold good, viz., only one dismissed and none refused promotion. (41) Now 29 years. (42) The principle has just (1884) been applied, combined with nomination, to the Statutory Civil Service (Native) in Lower Bengal.

the present Covenanted Civil Service Examinations, i.e., instead of 40 vacancies to the Covenanted Executive and Judicial Services being announced each year, 100 vacancies (or whatever number might be necessary) should be announced, and the candidates who did not pass in the first 40, and who could not therefore get into the Covenanted Service, should be allowed to choose the other departments in the order in which they passed the examination.

Thus the next 10 (40 to 50) might choose Educational, the sixth 10 (50 to 60) Financial, the seventh 10 (60 to 70) Forests, the eighth 10 Police, the ninth 10 Public Works, and so on. These open competitions should of course be examinations in general knowledge only, and the special training should come afterwards, but before the candidate went to India.

No exchange from one department to another should be permitted except with the sanction of the Secretary of State in Council, or else a young man who passed very low might, if he had interest, be exchanged from one department to another till he got to the highest, or even into the Covenanted Civil Service; and no exchange from another department into the Covenanted, Executive and Judicial Service should be permitted under any circumstances, as it would give too much room for favouritism. This system, besides providing a constant succession of competent officers for each department of the Administration, would have the great advantage of stopping, or at least greatly diminishing, the inter-departmental jealousies which are now so rife and which not only cause unpleasant feelings among officials, who, as Englishmen in a strange land, ought all to be on friendly terms, but actually impede the conduct of public business by the friction which is generated through them.

If all public servants above a certain grade (say those who began on Rs. 300 a month; all below that should be natives of India) were chosen by open competition in the same examination, and were allotted appointments in exactly the order in which they passed the examinations, there could be no subsequent jealousy between the different departments as regards pay and promotion; for each man would have had his chance given him, and would be rewarded afterwards in exact proportion to the merit which he had proved himself to possess. If he passed high in the examinations, he would obtain one of the favourite departments; if he passed low, he must content himself with one of the less favoured branches. Those who have sons and nephews to provide for need not be alarmed at a proposal like this, for there would be the same number of appointments to give away as before; and those who are now unable to obtain nominations might fairly hope that their protégés would obtain a place in some department or other when all were open to merit; the only persons who would be excluded would be the absolutely stupid, incompetent, and idle, and their success can hardly be wished for, it being the great merit of the proposed system that it would absolutely exclude all those who could not reasonably be expected to become fairly competent public servants, and who now too often find admission to the service of the State under the system of nomination.

THE AGE FOR ADMISSION

TO THE

CIVIL SERVICE.

A LETTER TO THE "PIONEER," WITH ARTICLES ON IT.

PART VIII.—The Age for Admission to the Civil Service.

I.—LETTER TO "PIONEER."

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I have much regretted to see that the Pioneer has taken up so strong a position on what I cannot help believing to be entirely the wrong side, on the question of the limit of age for the Indian Civil Service. In the article which appeared in your issue of the 4th September the reduction of the age for the open competition is called "a very important and valuable reform"; and in several other articles the Pioneer has assumed that there is really nothing to be said in favor of reverting to the former higher limit of age. I confess that it appears to me that in this matter your view is an entirely mistaken one; and I think I am not wrong in supposing that many Civilians, and other Europeans in India who are qualified to judge, agree with me in thinking that the age for the open competition should be at least 21 or 22. It is hardly necessary to say that all natives of India take this view, as the effect of the reduction of the age of candidates, which took place in 1879, has been to practically exclude natives of India from the competition. The strong feeling which has been excited among natives by this exclusion is evidenced by the frequent meetings which are held on the subject, and by the unanimous opinion expressed by speakers of every variety of race, position and education. I hold that this feeling alone is a very strong reason for increasing the limit of age: it is admittedly very undesirable to virtually exclude all natives of India from the possibility of competing for appointments in the Civil Service of their country; and their exclusion for the last five years has been one of the chief reasons given for the establishment of the Statutory Native Civil Service, an institution which has certainly not satisfied natives, or in any way compensated them for their exclusion from the Covenanted Civil Service; while it has not been such a success as to render it desirable from an administrative point of view. Mr. Cross, the Under-Secretary of State, appeared to argue, in his reply to Mr. O'Donnell in the House of Commons in May last, that the reduction of the limit of age to 19 had not had, and would not have, the effect of excluding natives of India; but he admitted that out of 12 natives who had passed into the Covenanted Service, six were over 20 years of age when they competed, and that three were over 19, leaving only three who could have entered under the present rules. I think these figures show the effect of the rules too clearly for the matter to require any further argument; and that we may, therefore, assume that if the age remains fixed at 19, natives of India will be practically excluded. If we turn to the European candidates, I think that we shall find equally solid reasons for doubting whether the fixture of the age at so low a limit as 19 is in any way advantageous.

The objections which I feel to the present system are these: (1) It makes the candidate go up for his examination before he is 19, and when he is, therefore, almost a boy: when his mind is not matured, and when those who develop slowly are not able to do justice to the powers which they really possess. (2) It makes success in the examination depend more upon memory and less upon the mental power of the candidates, which is exactly what should be avoided in an examination for the Indian Civil Service; the older the candidates are the more they will be able to show what they are really worth, and the less will the results depend on a schoolboy's verbal memory. (3) It makes the candidates reach India and begin their official duties before they are 21. They are then immature, and unfitted for the important judicial and executive duties which they are expected to perform directly after they land. (4) The fixing the age so low has rendered necessary the rule that all candidates shall be members of some university and college; and, as you admit, has had the practical result of sending all the candidates to one university and one college of that university. I should be the last to deny the value of a university training; and I at once admit that it is very desirable to secure it if you can do so without incurring a more than compensating disadvantage; but I view with the greatest jealousy any system which tends to restrict the area of competition; and anyone who knows the Competition Service knows full well that the present rules would have excluded some of our most able and successful officials, notably Sir Lepel Griffin, Mr. C. W. Carpenter, Mr. Henvey, Mr. Ware-Edgar, and Mr. Baden-Powell, none of whom were university men. If you impose restrictions on the absolute freedom of the open competition you may gain (though I doubt whether you will) certain advantages of social position or of intercourse among the candidates while at college, and of consequent esprit de corps afterwards; but you will infallibly exclude, every now and then just the one candidate of supreme ability whom it was more necessary to secure than twenty average candidates. A limited competition, such as that for the Indian Civil Service really now is, may provide you with a very satisfactory and capable class of officials perfectly competent for all the ordinary duties of the service; but when you look for the men fit to be Lieutenant-Governors, Members of Council, Chief Commissioners, and Secretaries to the Government of India, you will find that the net you spread so carefully to exclude those you did not want has much too effectually excluded those you wanted most. It is for this reason that I believe that the limits of age should be as wide as possible, and that no restrictions beyond English citizenship, good character, and fair health should be imposed. Neither before the open competition nor after it should there be any limitation which will exclude a candidate on the ground of poverty, or race, or absence of any arbitrary qualification, such as a University training or an education at any particular institution. The lowering of the limit of age has furnished the excuse for imposing the attendance at some university, and if it be only for this reason, I hold that it is disadvantageous and objectionable. (5) The low limit of age nullifies the only real advantage gained by residence at a university, viz., the power to go through the whole training prescribed for other students, and to take a degree at the end of it as a proof that the student has profited properly by the training. As you admit, candidates cannot now practically take their degrees without great difficulty, whereas when the limit of age was 22 and 23, two-thirds of the candidates took their degrees before coming to India. In the first year of the competition 14 out of 20 took their degrees; in the second year (1857) 13 out of 20; in the third year (1858) 6 out of 12 and so on, and these figures only give those who are known to have taken their degrees—there are probably several more who have taken degrees, but have not entered them in the Civil List. (6) It does not allow the candidates to finish their general education before passing the open competition; it therefore tempts the best men to continue their university studies and to compete for degrees and other university distinctions during the two years which intervene between the open competition and the final examination—a period which is already all too short to devote exclusively to the acquisition of the knowledge of law, oriental languages, and history and political economy which are necessary before a candidate can perform his duties effectively in India. If the age were fixed at 21 or 22, the candidate could finish his university course and take his degree before going up for the open competition. I would not make a university career a necessity for candidates, but I would certainly encourage all those who could afford it to adopt one and to take their degree. At present if a candidate wishes to take a degree, he can only do so by sacrificing part of the two years which he ought to devote entirely to Indian subjects; he is therefore compelled either to abandon his degree or to work for it after the open competition—both of which are undesirable. (7) Those who object to special tutors sometimes uphold the early limit of age because they contend that it causes a candidate to go up straight from school or college for the open competition, and renders it unnecessary for him to go to one of the so-called "crammers;" but that this is not the opinion of the candidates or of their parents is very apparent from the fact that more than half of the successful candidates in this year's competition were pupils of one "crammer" alone, viz., Mr. Wren, and no doubt Mr. Scoones and other special tutors passed several more; so that under the present system probably two-thirds of the successful candidates are specially prepared for the examination. I do not say that this is an evil, but the advocates of the early limit should not assume the reverse to be the fact, and then count it as a recommendation for their system. And (8) the present system brings the candidates to India at 21, which is a year or two too early for both physical and mental reasons. It is admitted, I believe, that, as regards health, 23 years is the best age at which to arrive in India; and there is no doubt that a man of 23 whose education is thoroughly finished, and whose habits of thought and life are thoroughly formed, is better able to resist the ill-effects of sudden isolation and semi-solitude to which the young Civilian is so often exposed on his first arrival in India, than a very young man of 21 is.

I cannot agree with you that the examinations for the open competition are "still very defective," or that they ever were "very defective;" they are conducted by the ablest men of the day, and their general scope is defined by men of such immense experience as Mr. Walrond and Mr. Headlam; the candidates who go up for them are, or at least were, men who had been through every form of examination at school, at college and at their universities, and who were thoroughly competent judges of the merits of an examination; and yet I may say that I have never heard a complaint from them against the system of the examinations or their general method, although individual examiners are of course blamed. That the examinations are successful in their results, and are a real test of ability, has been amply proved in the last 28 years, from the fact that the men who passed high in the examinations have been almost invariably the most able and efficient officials in after life, as witness Messrs. Reynolds (3rd), Aitchison (6th), Gordery (8th), Peile (10th), Quinton (4th), C. Robertson (5th), Carpenter (2nd), Monro (3rd), Barkley (4th), Duthoit (6th), Geoghegan (1st), Tyrrell (3rd), H. L. P. Wynne (4th), D. Fitzpatrick (6th), Sir W. Wedderburn (3rd), Geddes (2nd), Westland (1st), A. Mackenzie (2nd), W. W. Hunter (5th), H. E. Stokes (4th), and D. M. Harbour (6th), not to mention others whose reputation will be as great when they reach an equal standing.

In conclusion, I must protest against the assumption made in the latter part of your article of the 4th that the system of examination ought to be framed, and the age of candidates fixed with due regard to their effect on the unsuccessful candidates. This seems to me a wilful perversion of all the objects of a system of competitive examination; our aim should be to secure the best possible competitors for the Indian Civil Service; to sacrifice their interests in even the least degree to that of the unsuccessful one is to sacrifice India to England. What India wants is the best possible raw material from which to construct efficient public servants; she has no concern with the candidates who never come to India at all; and though we, as Englishmen, may sympathise with and do all we can to help the unsuccessful competitors, yet we have no right to sacrifice Indian interests for the sake of English requirements; and the doctrine which is set forth at the end of your article, that "this consideration (i.e., the interests of the unsuccessful competitors) alone is conclusive as to the propriety of keeping down the limit of age," is, you must excuse me for saying, a most immoral one. So far from its being conclusive, it ought to have absolutely no weight at all. Our sole object should be to secure the best possible body of Civil Servants for India, and we have no right even to consider any other object.

My letter is already too long; but the subject is complicated and important, and you will perhaps allow me to say a word or two on what I advocate, as you have allowed me to show why I object to the present system. The maximum age of candidates should, I think, be fixed at 21 for the open competition; they will then be somewhat over 23 when they reach India, which is the best age, as it is young enough to leave a man pliable and able to receive new impressions and so get reconciled to the country; and yet it is old enough to secure that his habits and thoughts have been formed, and that he will not be too boyish and immature. There should be no limitation on the eligibility of candidates except (1) of age (2) being British subjects, (3) of fair health, and (4) of good moral character. These four essentials being granted, a person should be eligible whatever his race or place of education may be. Candidates should not be required to have attended any college or university, nor should any advantage be given them for having done so; but they should be told that it is considered desirable that they should do so, and that the possession of a degree will probably be advantageous to them in India. Lastly, in framing any regulations on the subject, we should always remember that what we have to bear constantly in mind are the requisites of the public service in India and not the necessities of English youths or of English education. Our rules must be such that natives of India can compete with young Englishmen on an absolute equality, except that they must go to England to compete; and this condition is made, not for the purpose of testing intellectual qualifications, which could be almost, if not quite, as well tested in India, but to test the candidates' moral qualities and to widen their views and free them from local and caste prejudices. We may be sure that a native who is courageous enough to go to England, industrious and able enough to pass the examinations in competition with the pick of young Englishmen, and steady and self-reliant enough to live reputably and work hard during four or five years in England, will be in every way deserving of being admitted into one of the best services in the world; and the natives of India who fulfil these conditions have a right to demand that they should be admitted into the Civil Service of their country in every way on a level with the English members of it. The present system prevents their admission to the Covenanted Service, and throws open to them only the so-called Statutory Civil Service, which is inferior in pay and in status, and is not in fact the Civil Service of the country. If we returned to the old rules as they were for 25 years from 1855 to 1879, Englishmen, and particularly English parents, would rejoice, for their sons are now deprived at 19 years of age of all chance of passing into the service which they covet; and natives of India would be satisfied, for the Covenanted Civil Service would be thrown open to them under conditions to which they would not object. Their ablest and boldest representatives would go to England and would secure places for themselves in the Covenanted Service; while those whose means, abilities, or courage did not qualify them to aspire so high would find appointments in the Uncovenanted Service which ought to satisfy all but those with the very highest qualifications: and if, as I recommended in my pamphlet on the Competition Service (1882), all the appointments in the Forest, Police, Education, Customs, Telegraph and other departments, where well-educated men (whether Europeans or natives) are required, were offered to the candidates for the Covenanted Civil Service who had failed to obtain places in that service, but were otherwise qualified, the distinction between Covenanted and Uncovenanted services which is in many ways objectionable and invidious, would be abolished, and there would be an upper Civil Service recruited in England from both Englishmen and natives of India, well paid, requiring the highest qualifications, and offering a career which any man might be proud to adopt: and a lower Civil Service recruited entirely in India and from natives of India (except in a few departments where Europeans might be necessary for physical reasons), offering a fairly paid and respectable career to those who did not aspire to the higher service. This lower service should then of course be recruited by open competition all over India, the four necessary qualifications being required as for the upper service.

Those two services would then correspond to the lower and higher divisions of the English Civil Service, as constituted by the Order in Council of 1876, and the last blow would be struck at the system of patronage and appointment by interest, which is so unfair to the deserving, and has resulted in the departments officered by Englishmen in such disastrous failure. If the departments now called uncovenanted were filled by competition in England, the candidates passing the same examination (i.e., in general education) as those for the present Covenanted Service, but being afterwards specially trained for their particular department (as Forest, Police, Telegraph, &c.), more than 100 appointments could be given in each year, and Anglo-Indian parents would see an opening for all the more capable and industrious of their sons, while natives of India would be more encouraged to go to England and to compete for these appointments from knowing that the number would be so much larger and the competition so much less severe than it is now. Whatever we Anglo-Indians may do or wish on this subject, let us at least be clear-sighted enough to admit that the matter will be settled for us in England by the Secretary of State or if necessary by Parliament, in accordance with the wishes of the natives of India, as soon as these wishes are fully understood. We may object to raise the age we may constitute an inferior service on purpose for natives, we may make the rules such that it is almost impossible for a native to enter the Covenanted Service; but all these obstacles will be brushed away like cobwebs as soon as a Radical Parliament begins to appreciate that they are obstacles in the path of natives who wish to enter the service. Is it not better and manlier for us, as the ruling race, to say at once, and before we are compelled by external pressure to do so: "We throw open the highest posts in your Civil Service to you; you will be treated in every way as Englishmen are when you have entered that service; the rules of examination shall be framed with a due regard to your qualifications; the subsequent training shall be adapted to your requirements; all we ask of you is a proof of moral courage and freedom from prejudice, to be shown by your going to England, and this given, we will welcome you as one of ourselves into our most exclusive service if you can beat our best young men in competing for it. We are not afraid of you; we will treat you in all respects fairly, and if you beat us, we will welcome you."

A. COTTERELL TUPP.

II.—REPLY OF "PIONEER."

The Age of Admission to the Civil Service again.

We publish to-day a long letter from Mr. A. C. Tupp on the age for admission to the Civil Service. Mr. Tupp ignores all that has been said about the disadvantages of maintaining the old and higher standard of age, to which he now proposes to revert, and especially the conclusive arguments contained in the bulky blue-book of 1875, the publication of which, and the article in the Edinburgh Review we lately referred to, brought about the reduction in the standard of age. To refute Mr. Tupp's arguments would, therefore, require a re-statement of old matter which has already done its duty, but there must be some degree of finality in a discussion of this sort: one cannot be for ever flogging a dead horse. The arguments pro and con were thoroughly worked out nine years ago, with the result that the standard of age was deliberately altered, and we may hope that no such mistake as a backward movement in this respect is now likely to be made. The contention that the higher the age fixed, the better the quality of the candidates is likely to be, will hardly carry conviction to many readers of the letter. It might be asserted with equal truth that the lower the age, the better the chance would be of securing a good raw material to work up into the future Civil Servant. To take a pertinent illustration: it is well understood by those who are conversant with the matter that, by fixing the competition for the Navy at the early age of fourteen, the interests of that service are best secured. Mr. Tupp displays a naïve astonishment at our statement that the present competitive test is faulty in detail, and cites the names of a number of men of more or less proved ability who have come out high at the competition, as if that proved anything. Suppose that the terms of the competition excluded all Scotchmen or all Yorkshiremen, there would still be found plenty of clever men entering the service; yet would that prove that the system was fair or satisfactory?

Mr. Tupp, indeed, seems not to be disturbed with any doubts whether open competition is the best of all possible ways of selecting the members of the Civil Service. On this point we may just notice, what is a very remarkable commentary on the competitive system, that the last of the old Haileybury men who entered the service at the same time with the first of the competition men have at least held their own with the latter as public servants, and in general repute for culture and mental capacity; the Lieutenant-Governor of those Provinces may be named as one instance. Competition has produced no scholar or statesman to be compared with Mountstuart Elphinstone, who came out to India a boy of seventeen. Indeed, it would be no paradox to say that the present competition is calculated to exclude first-class ability from the service. This, however, is a point that we cannot follow up here. We may admit that selection for the public service by open competition is an inevitable necessity of the times and that for Englishmen the system may not be injurious. The men chosen by such a system are likely to be as fit in character and other necessary qualifications, social and physical, as those chosen by any other test; although this is admitting a good deal, they will be average English gentlemen. But open competition as a means of selecting Indians for the public service is an exceedingly bad test, especially under our system of gratuitous education. Intellectual capacity of the kind to serve for a competition examination conveys no guarantee that it will be accompanied by good character or the moral qualities required in the Civil Service; while, if the Civil Service were largely recruited from Indians, a mere intellectual test would confer a practical monopoly of appointment on the race which, of all the people of India, is least fitted to govern, and which would be far less acceptable to the Indians themselves as their rulers than even the foreigners who are now so good-humouredly bearing their vilification by the Bengali Press. If, then, an indirect effect of the lowering of the standard of age has been to exclude Bengalis from the competition, the result has been wholly beneficial. The creation of the class of Statutory Civilians, on the other hand, was a statesmanlike measure calculated to provide a class of administrators really suitable for the position and acceptable to the people whom they are set over. We are not misled, as Mr. Tupp appears to be, by the appearance of agitation on this subject to which he refers. To suppose that the people of India generally take any interest in the subject, or have any opinion about it, is of course absurd, while the Indians whose opinions and feelings are most worth consulting are all, we may be quite sure, in favour of a system of nomination which affords a reasonable safeguard for the character and social position of the nominees. We regard, then, the creation of the class of Statutory Civilians as a wise and statesmanlike measure; it was a satisfactory, indeed the only satisfactory, solution of the problem how properly to associate the natives with ourselves in the administration of the country.

Mr Tupp concludes by saying that, after all, the settlement of this question will not rest with any authorities here but with the dominant party at home, and that, as soon as this party discover what the natives of India want, they will gratify their desire. We are well aware of this, although we should have doubted whether even the Radical party, ignorant and self-sufficient though it be, would be prepared to carry out a policy so fatuous as to govern India, not for its good, but in accordance with the crude wishes of those natives who have got to the point of expressing them, and we not seen how devoid of wisdom and judgment a ruler chosen from that party could show himself to be, even when he had the means of gaining wisdom and caution. But however that may be, and whatever may be the foolish experiments in store for India, let those who know better at least have the courage to say what they think, instead of playing the ignoble part recommended by Mr. Tupp, of truckling to the majority and accepting the voice of Parliament and a noisy democracy as the utterance of wisdom.

III.—THE "INDIAN MIRROR."

Mr. A. C. Tupp's Advocacy of the Enhancement of Age of Competition for the Civil Service.

It can hardly be a question now that the original reduction of the limit of age of candidates wishing to compete for the Indian Civil Service, and the strong opposition hitherto offered to its restoration to the former standard, both which operated in the practical exclusion of natives of India from these competitive examinations, were solely prompted by a desire on the part of the strong anti-native party in England to lessen the force of the competition, and to perpetuate, if possible, the monopoly of place, power, and emolument, which Englishmen have enjoyed in India for nearly a century and-a-half. The rivalry, as the years went by, was becoming stronger in every department in which native youths were allowed to compete, till the chances of young Englishmen to succeed in the race were fast dwindling away. It is only men, and classes of men, who are conscious of their own intellectual superiority, that eagerly seek for the competition that puts that superiority to its true test. It is not surprising, therefore, that a few members of the Civil Service, whose numbers are easily reckoned up, should have always contended for a fair field and no favour for Europeans and Indians in the open race of life; and we are heartily rejoiced to be able to add to this honourable roll of Englishmen, of whom their country may well be proud, the name of Mr. A. C. Tupp of the same service. In a letter to the Pioneer, which, for its spirit, tone, and political insight, is deserving of the highest commendation, Mr. Tupp has attacked the strong position the Allahabad paper had taken up entirely on the wrong side of the question of the limit of age for the Indian Civil Service. In assuming that many Civilians and other Europeans in India who are qualified to judge will agree with him in thinking that the age for the open competition should be at least 21 or 22 years. Mr. Tupp is as correct as in believing that it is the general conviction of the native mind that the effect of the reduction of age which took place in 1879, was practically to exclude natives of India from the competition. The objections to the present system Mr. Tupp sums up as follows:

Firstly.—Candidates go up for examination before 19 years of age when they are almost boys, when their minds are not matured, and when such as develop slowly are unable to do justice to their powers.

Secondly.—Success in the examination depends more upon memory and less upon mental power. According to their greater age, the candidates will be better able to show what they are really worth, and results will depend less upon a school-boy's verbal memory.

Thirdly.—Under the present system, Civil Servants reach India and begin their official duties before 21 years of age. As a consequence, they are unfitted for the important judicial and executive duties which they are expected to perform directly after they land.

Fourthly.—The present low limit of age has necessitated the rule that all candidates shall be members of some university and college and, as a practical result, that they should be members of one university and of one college of that university. By imposing restrictions on the absolute freedom of the open competition, certain advantages of social position or of intercourse among the candidates while at college, and of consequent esprit de corps afterwards, may perhaps be gained; but it will happen that the effect may be to exclude with a mathematical certainty just the one candidate of supreme ability whom it was more necessary to secure than twenty average candidates. A restricted competition may provide a satisfactory and capable class of men perfectly competent for the ordinary duties of the service, but it will certainly fail to obtain the very best men who are required for the most important offices.

Fifthly.—The low limit of age neutralises the only real advantage gained by residence at a university—namely, the power to go through the whole training prescribed for other students, and to take a degree at the end of it as a proof that the student has fully profited by the training.

Sixthly.—Candidates are unable to finish their general education before going up for the open competition. The best men are, therefore, tempted to continue their university studies, and to compete for degrees and other academic distinctions during the two years intervening between the open competition and the final examination. This period is, however, insufficient for the acquisition of the knowledge of law, oriental languages, history, and political economy, so necessary to a Civil Servant on duty in India. If the age were fixed at 21 or 22 years, the candidate could finish his university course and take his degree before going up for the open competition.* Mr. Tupp would not make a university career an obligatory condition on candidates.

Seventhly.—The supposition that, under the present limit of age, candidates can go up straight from school or college for the open competition, is erroneous, since two-thirds of the successful candidates have been specially prepared for the examination.

Eighthly.—The present limit brings men to India too early both for physical and mental reasons. A man of 23 years of age, whose education is thoroughly finished and whose habits of thought and life are thoroughly formed, is undoubtedly better able to resist the ill effects of sudden isolation and semi-solitude to which a young Civil Servant is exposed in his first arrival in India than a mere youth of 21 years.

* Mr. Tupp strongly protests—and very rightly—against the assumption that the system of examination ought to be framed, and the age of candidates fixed, with due regard to their effect on the unsuccessful candidates. Such conditions would operate in the wilful perversion of the aim and object of a system of open competition for the Indian Civil Service, and eventually in the sacrifice of India to England. What India wants is the best possible raw material from which to construct an efficient body of public servants; and, as Mr. Tupp very justly contends, we are not justified in concerning ourselves with any other object. Two passages of his letter deserve specially to be reproduced. The first is as follows:—

"The maximum age of candidates should, I think, be fixed at 21 for the open competition; .....they should be admitted into the Civil Service of their country in every way on a level with the English members of it."

Such sentiments are worthy of a true-born Englishman, who, while struggling himself to lead in the race of life, is animated by that spirit of true nobility which prompts him to yield a free and equal chance to any man who promises to vie with him in honourable rivalry in carrying off the palm of distinction. We do not believe that we have seen a better provision suggested for the employment of the unsuccessful candidates for the Civil Service than is to be found in the following passage of Mr. Tupp's paper:—

"Their ablest and boldest representatives would go to England and would secure places for themselves in the Covenanted Service."..... .

This suggestion is most practical, and, if carried out, its result would be most conducive to the best interests of the Empire. We hope that the question may be earnestly taken up in England, and may be decided to the satisfaction of the wishes of the natives of India.

IV.—THE "STATESMAN"—CALCUTTA, OCTOBER 1ST, 1884.

Mr. Tupp's remonstrance on the subject of the Civil Service age will commend itself, we believe, to a great many more Englishmen in India, both in the service and outside it, than some of our contemporaries may be disposed to think.

Quotes from "Whatever Anglo-Indians may do or wish" down to "if you beat us, we will welcome you." We believe these views will commend themselves to the great majority of Englishmen in India. They are animated by right feeling, and are the suggestions of common sense.

V.—THE "STATESMAN"—CALCUTTA, OCTOBER 2ND, 1884.

The concluding sentences of Mr. A. C. Tupp's letter to the Pioneer noticed by us yesterday seem to us very opportune and important.

Quotes from "I must protest against the assumption" down to "we have no right even to consider any other object." Whatever some of our contemporaries may think, these are the only convictions worthy of us as a people, and the only convictions that will "wear."

VI. THE "BEHAR HERALD"—BANKIPUR, OCTOBER 14TH, 1884.

The Pioneer in a recent issue discussed the important question of the limit of age for the Indian Civil Service, and observed that the reduction of age for the open competition from 21 to 19, which was affected by Lord Salisbury when Secretary of State for India, was a very valuable reform. It has elicited a singularly able and thoughtful paper from Mr. A. C. Tupp, Accountant-General, North-Western Provinces and Oudh, dealing with the whole subject in a manner which leaves nothing to be desired. He proves to demonstration that the present low limit of age not only involves a grave injustice to the natives of India, but that it is not in any way advantageous to the European candidates.

Quotes from "it makes the candidate go up for his examination before he is 19" down to "good character and fair health should be imposed," and from "In the first year of the competition 14 out of 20" down to "both of which are undesirable." All this is simply unanswerable.....It will be seen that Mr. Tupp does not discuss the question from a purely native point of view. He has no hesitation in saying that English parents will rejoice if the limit of age be raised. Such being the case, no time ought to be lost in raising the limit of age. Lord Salisbury urged, and the Pioneer repeats the argument in the article to which allusion has been made above, that the age of candidates should be fixed with due regard to its effect on the unsuccessful candidates. Mr. Tupp thus answers the argument: quotes from "Our aim should be to secure" down to "even to consider any other object." All this is unanswerable. It seems to us that Mr Tupp has made out a strong case for raising the present low limit of age for admission to the Indian Civil Service.

VII.—THE "BENGAL PUBLIC OPINION"—CALCUTTA, OCTOBER 16TH, 1884.

THE CIVIL SERVICE QUESTION.

The latest contribution to the literature of the Civil Service question is a letter to the Pioneer from Mr. A. C. Tupp, who deserves our best thanks for having put forth with great clearness, as well as many-sidedness, the necessity and reasonableness of raising the maximum limit of candidates' age for the open competitive examination. The question has already been discussed with iterations and re-iterations so many times that we should not have made Mr. Tupp's letter the subject of an article, were it not for the striking practical insight with which he has pointed out a few of the disadvantages of the present limit of age, and the thoughtfulness with which he has suggested how the unsuccessful candidates should be employed, both of which have to us the appearance almost of novelty.

Quotes from "I should be the last to deny the value" down to "count it as a recommendation for their system." These two points have seemed to us most striking in Mr. Tupp's letter, and we notice them with much pleasure.

Quotes from "this seems to me a wilful perversion" down to "we have no right even to consider any other object." Having thus shown the keen sagacity with which Mr. Tupp objects to the low limit of age as highly disadvantageous to all parties concerned, let us now see what he says with regard to the employment of the unsuccessful candidates.

Quotes from "If as I recommended in my pamphlet" down to "the competition so much less severe than it is now." Our readers will have noticed one remarkable feature in the extracts we have made, that, while the arguments they contain are irresistible and their practical bearing highly suggestive, the question is not treated in them as a question between Europeans and natives of this country, but with regard to the advantage of all concerned. It is impossible to read Mr. Tupp's letter without being delighted at the impartiality which runs through it.

VIII.—THE "BENGALEE"—CALCUTTA, OCTOBER 18TH, 1884.

Mr. Tupp, of the Bengal Civil Service, has written an admirable letter to the Pioneer, advocating the raising of the limit of age for the Civil Service of India. Quotes from "If we return to the old rules as they were" down to "the four necessary qualifications being required as for the upper service," and from "that the examinations are successful" down to "when they reach an equal standing." Mr. Tupp's remonstrances on the subject of the Civil Service age will commend itself to all liberal-minded men and does honour to the writer himself.

Quotes from "Whatever Anglo-Indians may do....." down to "if you beat us, we will welcome you."

IX.—THE "HINDU PATRIOT"—CALCUTTA, OCTOBER 27TH, 1884.

Lord Salisbury's view was an entirely mistaken one. This has been conclusively proved by Mr. Tupp, of the Bengal Civil Service, in a most able and thoughtful letter addressed to the Pioneer. Mr. Tupp strongly protests against the assumption that the system of examination ought to be framed, and the age of candidates fixed with regard to their effect on the unsuccessful candidates. In this view all sensible and right-minded persons will concur. Mr. Tupp rightly holds that our aim should be to secure the best possible competitors for the Indian Civil Service; and he justly remarks that to sacrifice their interests in even the least degree to that of the unsuccessful ones is to sacrifice India to England. Quotes from "What India wants is" down to "for the sake of English requirements." This is simply unanswerable.....We have over and over again said in these columns that we do not advocate the raising of the present age limit in the interests of native candidates. Mr. Tupp now proves to demonstration that the fixing of the age at so low a limit as 19 is not in any way favourable to European candidates. The reasons which he brings forward in support of this view are so cogent that they must commend themselves to the common sense of the thinking portion of the community. Mr. Tupp points out a more serious evil than cramming: it is needless to say that immature youths of 21 are not fitted for the important judicial and executive duties which they are expected to perform directly after they land.

NOTE.—I hope I may be excused for quoting articles containing laudation of myself, but I was unable in any other way to show how completely the native press in Northern India, at any rate, agrees with me on this subject. I have not heard whether the press in Bombay or Madras has discussed the subject since the appearance of my letter, but the Hon'ble Badr-ud-din Tyabji (Member of Legislative Council, Bombay) writes to me: "I am glad you side with us on this important question, and I trust that our agitation may have the desired effect."

PART IX.

SUGGESTIONS WITH REGARD

TO

INDIAN CIVIL SERVICE PENSIONS.

PART IX.—Suggestions with regard to Indian Civil Service Pensions.

1. The present system of pension in the Indian Civil Service is founded on the principle that the longer and more eminent an officer's services are, the smaller is the pension which he will receive. The total pension which is obtainable after 25 years' total service (of which 21 years must be actual residence in India and 4 years may be furlough) is £1,000 per annum. This pension consists of two parts, of which (1) the one is paid by Government, and is the difference between the other part and £1,000; and (2) the other is the accumulation of deductions of 4 per cent. made monthly from the officer's salary from the date on which he enters the Service until that on which he retires.

2. As the deductions continue to be made during the whole of his service, even after he has completed 25 years' service, it is evident that the longer an officer's service is, and the more highly he is paid (i.e., presumably the more meritorious he is), the larger will be the sum of the deductions, and consequently the smaller will be part I., or the balance which Government has to pay.

3. This will be best shown by two instances—one in which the officer rises through the ordinary grades to a District Judgeship and retires at 25 years' service, without any special merit: the other, where he distinguishes himself early in his career, serves chiefly in the Secretariat or special appointments, and retires at 30 years' service, after holding, for some years, the post of Secretary to the Government of India. The pay of each rank is given, and the steps of promotion are placed at the periods when an officer would most probably obtain them in each case. The deduction of 4 per cent. from his salary, throughout his career, is made, and the total amount deducted is shown for each officer.

4. It is right to add that in both cases a certain addition* is made by the Civil Pension Fund to the officer's own savings (from deductions), and that this goes to diminish the amount payable by Government; but, as this is equal in both cases, and as it does not affect the question of the amounts payable respectively by an average officer and by a distinguished officer (which is now under consideration), it may be omitted.

It will, of course, be understood that only the sum of the deductions is given here; interest, both ordinary and that at the favourable rates allowed by Government to the Fund, is omitted to avoid complexity; so that the sum at credit of a Civilian on his retirement is really very much more than is stated here:—

Thevalue of an annuity of £500 at 45 years of age may be taken from the figures given at pages 6 and 8 of the Parliamentary Paper of 9th May, 1862 (in despatch from Government of India to Secretary of State, No. 41 of 1862) at Rs. 55,000: a contribution of Rs. 14,543 would therefore represent only an annuity of £133 (without interest or contributions from the fund).

4 per cent. of Rs. 7,52,352=Rs. 30,094. †

Taking the value of an annuity of £500 as before at Rs. 55,000, a contribution of Rs. 30,094 would represent an annuity of £274 (without interest or contributions from the Fund).

We find, therefore, that the distinguished officer pays £274 himself in simple subscriptions, without interest, while the average officer pays only £133.

7. These amounts are, of course, merely representative, and are given only to show the proportionate difference in the payments of an average and of a specially distinguished officer. To ascertain the actual amounts (out of the £1,000) paid in each case, we must add the contribution of the Fund (from lapses, &c.), which is estimated at £139,‡ and also compound interest.

It will be sufficiently accurate for practical purposes if the contributions be doubled for compound interest and the £139 added in both cases; we then obtain these figures:—

				Average officer. £	Distinguished officer. £
Own subscriptions	...	...	...	133	274
Interest ...	...	...	...	133	274
Contribution from the Fund		...	...	139	139
		Total	...	405	687

And it may be reckoned, in round numbers that an average officer receives £600 from Government and pays £400 himself and from the Fund; while a very distinguished officer receives £300 from Government and pays £700 himself and from the Fund.

8. This is a system which would appear to require alteration; but in order to alter the present rules as little as possible, while removing the anomalies which now exist, this scale of £600 after 25 years' service should be taken as the standard for future pensions, and if this is done, no increased burden will be thrown on the State with regard to those who retire at the usual period.

9. It is desirable to offer proportionately smaller pensions to officers who have not completed 25 years' service, but who, from ill health or other causes, are not thoroughly efficient and are willing to retire. Even if a Civilian is thoroughly efficient, he should be allowed to retire after a certain minimum of actual residence if he himself desires it. This minimum may be fixed at 15 years.

10. It is preferable to take actual residence as the test for pension rather than service, which includes furlough; and it may be generally reckoned that 20 years' active residence is the equivalent of 25 years' service.* By taking residence as the standard instead of service, Government secures that the person shall have done a certain fixed amount of real work in India, whereas Service may have been to a great extent composed of leave taken in England.†

*=£3,800 † Simple deductions without interest. ‡ See note at foot of last page.

11. If, then, we start with the two assumptions that £000 after 25 years' service is the present pension paid by Government and that 25 years' service is equal to 20 years' residence, we get as a standard the rule that the future pension payable by Government alone should be £600 for 20 years' residence.

12. The pension to be paid by Government should increase regularly from 20 years up to the maximum standing, for which it is to the advantage of the Government to retain the services of a Civilian. The present rules allow a Civilian to retire after 25 years and compel him to retire after 35 years' service: the mean of 30 years' service may be fairly assumed to be the maximum period for which it is to the advantage of the State that the Civilian should remain in the Service. After that time he should thereforor obtain no increase to his pension: 30 years' service may be reckoned as equal to 25 years' actual residence, because, though the total leave allowed under present furlough rules is 6 years, many officers do not take more than 5 years in that time.

13. The minimum period for pension should therefore be 15 years' actual residence; the ordinary period (to be taken as a standard) should be 20 years' actual residence with £600 a year pension; and the maximum should be 25 years' actual residence with a pension in proportion. Up to 20 years the amount is in the proportion of £30 for every year's residence; but above 20 years this amount should no doubt be larger, as the risk from residing in India after the age of 40 increases rapidly.

14. If we take £50 as the rate at which the pension should increase annually after 20 years' residence, and £30 as the rate between 15 and 20 years, the table will be as follows:—

Years of actual residence.	Pensions. £
15	350
16	380
17	410
18	440
19	470
20	600
21	650
22	700
23	750
24	800
25	850

No higher pension than £850 would be attainable, except under special circumstances. A wide difference of £130 is made between the pensions of 19 years and of 20 years, in order to induce officers to complete the 20 years' residence if possible.

15. It will be seen that, except maintaining the general principle, that the longer the service (providing it is approved service), the larger should be the pension, as few alterations as possible in the present rules have been suggested.

The present minimum is 25 years' service for which its equivalent of 20 years' actual residence is substituted, and the rate of £600, which is the estimated portion of the total pension now paid by Government, is retained.

16. The Government of India should have the right at any time to compel a Civilian to retire after he has completed his 20 years' actual residence and earned his pension of £600 a year. The higher rates of pension would therefore be rewards to meritorious servants whose services it was desired to retain; and the increased expenditure on that account would be amply met by the savings in pay of incompetent Civilians, who would be compelled to retire at 20 years' residence instead of remaining on till 25 and even 30 years' residence as they do now.

17. During this time they draw very high salaries and perform no equivalent work for it. It is therefore very desirable to dispense with their services at the earliest time when it can be done with justice, and to devote the money so saved to the payment of higher pensions to the meritorious officers, whom it is really to the advantage of Government to retain. At present a good officer who stays on after 25 years' service (i. e., 20 years' residence) really presents to

* Under the present furlough rules, 20 years' service is the equivalent of 20 years' actual residence, as 6 years is the maximum furlough allowed; but few officers take the whole. † Thus, if the minimum qualification for pension be fixed at 20 years' actual residence, the Civilian must have been actually 20 years on duty in India; but if it be 25 years' service, the period may have been composed of 5 years and 9 months' leave with pay, 5 years' leave without pay, and only 14 years and 3 months' actual duty in India instead of 20 years.

Government a portion of his pension for every year he stays: thus, if the pension paid by Government is £600 at 25 years' service, it diminishes roughly thus* on an average:—

Years of service.	Years of actual residence.	Total pension.	Part paid by Government.	Part paid by Fund.
25	20	1,000	600	400
26	21	1,000	550	450
27	22	1 000	500	500
28	23	1,000	450	550
29	24	1,000	400	600
30	25	1,000	350	650

18. The pensions recently sanctioned for the Army are as follows, and, considering the very large amount of leave which counts as service in the case of Military officers, it may be fairly reckoned that only three-fourths of their service is actual residence. In the following table their length of service, rate of pension, and corresponding actual residence are given, and in the last column the pension proposed for Civilians of the same amount of residence is inserted:—

Military Officers.			Proposed pension for Civilians of same residence.	Difference.
Years' service.	Pension.	Years' actual residence.
	£		£	£
20	280	15	350	70
24	420	18	440	20
28	571	21	650	79
32	783	24	800	27

Considering that Civilians entered the Service at an average age at least two years greater than that of Military officers, and have to pass far more difficult examinations in order to obtain an appointment, it will hardly appear that the slight excess of pension is too great.

19. The result of the present proposals may be summed up thus:—

(1) They would remove the great injustice of the pension diminishing in proportion to the length and merit of a Civilian's service.

(2) They would cost nothing to the State, as ordinary pensions for 25 years' service would remain the same as now: the larger pensions granted for longer approved service would be paid for by the savings of pay of incompetent Civilians made to retire at 25 years' service, and the pensions proposed for less than 20 years' residence are smaller than the present invalid pensions.

(3) They would secure a better return to the State for the pension given, by founding the claim on actual residence completed instead of on nominal service.

(4) The standard of pension would be the same as now, viz., £600 a year after 25 years' service.

(5) The rapidly increasing pension, from 20 to 25 years' actual residence, would tempt selected officers of acknowledged ability to remain in the Service when their services are most valuable to the State, whereas they now often retire at exactly 25 years' service, knowing that they have nothing to gain in pension by remaining.

20. If these proposals were carried out, officers at present in the Service should, on retirement, have the amount of their subscriptions (less the favourable rate of interest) returned to them, and all officers joining the Service after a certain date should be exempted from contributing to the Fund. Those already in the Service might also be exempted from contributions after a certain date, and the whole Fund be wound up at once. This would save the large amount which the State now spends in calculating and collecting the contributions to the Funds at all Treasuries and Account offices. This work, with its accompanying correspondence, is very considerable, and the reductions which would be possible, if it were abolished, would go far to pay for the increased pensions, besides freeing the Account and Treasury officers from a certain amount of work.

21. The pensions would then consist of three classes:—The first for those who had completed 15 years, but not 20 years' residence; these, instead of being given only on medical certificate as at present, should be obtainable by all, provided the Local Government and Government of India did not object to the officers' taking pension; for an officer may be in very good health, and yet it may be for the interest of the State that he should take pension: in such cases he should be allowed to do so. The only cases in which such pensions would be disallowed would be where an officer was in good health and was perfectly efficient in every way, so that the Government would not wish to lose his services.

The second class would be the ordinary pension of £600 a year after 20 years' residence; this would be claimable, as a matter of right in all cases, when the period was completed.

The third class would be the increased pensions of more than £600, which would be claimable only if the Government allowed the officer to stay on beyond the 25 years, and would be only given in cases of marked efficiency.

The three classes may be shown thus:—

CLASS I.

Years' residence.	Pension.	Qualification.
15	350	Ill-health or special permission of Government of India.
16	380
17	410
18	440
19	470

CLASS II.

20	600	Claimable in all cases.

CLASS III.

21	650	Claimable only for special efficiency.
22	700
23	750
24	800
25	850

22. It would probably also be advisable to award a class of pensions, for very distinguished service, to those officers who had held the highest offices, but had not necessarily completed very long terms of service, i. e., to render good pensions obtainable by high office as well as by long service. The office should rank according to its salary, and the following scale might be adopted, taking only salaries above Rs. 2,500 per mensem as that is the highest amount reached in the ordinary course of the service. They should be confined to those officers who have held a post of the rank specified (whether permanently or officiating) not less than five years, and to those who have completed not less than 20 years' actual residence. No time spent on leave (except privilege) would count in the 5 years' service required:—

Salary.	Pension.	Salary.	Pension.
Rs.	£	Rs.	£
2 750	800	4,000	900
3,000	820	4 500	920
3,250	840	5,000	940
3,500	860	5,500	960
3,750	880	6,000	980

23. If, however, it be finally determined to retain the present Civil Funds, it would probably be desirable that all subscriptions to them should cease after 20 years' residence or 25 years' service (whichever was completed first); and that the amount of pension to be paid by Government should be a fixed one, and not dependent on the amount of the officer's subscriptions, as it now is. The same pensions which are suggested in paragraph 14 might be granted by Government, and these might be supplemented by pensions from the Funds.

The rates would then be approximately :—

Years' actual residence.	Pension from Government.	Pension from the Fund.	Total.	Condition.
15	350	100	450	Invaliding or special permission of Government of India.
16	380	170	550
17	410	240	650
18	440	310	750
19	470	380	850
20	600	400*	1,000	To all.
21	650	400	1,050	Special efficiency, service being extended by Government of India.
22	700	400	1,100
23	750	400	1,150
24	800	400	1,200
25	850	400	1,250

24. The two great principles to be maintained in any case are (1) that pension should be earned by actual residence and not by service; (2) that the Government pension should increase with length of actual residence up to a maximum of 25 years.

25. The opinion of Sir W. T. Denison, Governor of Madras, who had great experience in the Colonies, may be quoted, in conclusion, to show the objections to the present Indian Civil Service Pension rules. He says in his minute of the 30th January, 1862 :—

"In every colony with which I am acquainted the principle is laid down that the man who has served the Government faithfully is entitled, when age or ill-health compel him to relinquish the performance of his duties, to claim either a pension or gratuity. . . . . Should he have served for more than 10 years he can claim a pension, the ratio borne by which to the pay of the office from which he retires increases regularly with the length of his service. . . . . In India, however, it would appear that the longer an officer serves the Government, and the more important the duties which he is called upon to perform, the less claim he is considered to have to any acknowledgment of his services: he may indeed, as is the case with Mr. Morehead,† have paid the Government several thousand rupees beyond the value of the pension which he will receive. A state of things so adverse to the general principles which elsewhere regulate the conduct of the Government towards its servants would seem to call at once for revision and amendment."

July, 1881. A. C. T.

* Subscriptions to the Fund to cease after 20 years' actual residence; the Pension from the Fund would therefore not increase after that.

In the above table I have given the average salaries of the Civilians of each year from 1854 to 1880 who are actually employed in the province named at the head of the column. Officers are classified according to the province in which they are stationed, and not according to substantive appointments—thus Mr. W. E. Ward is taken under Burmah, not under Assam; Mr. Donovan under North-West, not under Assam; and Mr. R. J. Crosthwaite under Central Provinces, not under North-West. I have also shown in the last column the average pay of all the Civilians of that particular year in all provinces; and in the bottom line of the table the average pay of all Civilians of that province in all years. These averages have been calculated by taking the average of all the separate pays, and not the average of the average pays, as the two differ considerably: thus Assam (which I calculated both ways) gives 1,414 for the average of all years when calculated on averages, and 1,294 when calculated on actual pays all added together, and divided by the total number of officers: so Central Provinces gives 1,617 as the average of averages, but 1,652 as the average of actual pays. It is therefore necessary to add up the total pay-list of the province and divide the sum by the number of officers employed; and this, of course, involves considerable labour. I have limited my calculations to the years between 1854 and 1880, as the Civilians who came out before 1854 are very few and are drawing in most cases exceptional salaries: while those who came out after 1880 are nearly all Assistants on fixed pay, and their pay is affected by their success or the reverse in the provincial standard examinations.

From the above table it appears that there are in these years the following number of Civilians drawing aggregate and average pay as detailed below:—

Order of numbers.	Province.	Number of Civilians.	Aggregate pay.	Average pay.	Order of average pay.
			Rs.	Rs.
6	India	49	1,19,564	2,440	1

	Total ...	790	13,46,106	1,707

Those under the Government of India draw, as might be expected, considerably the highest average pay, viz., Rs. 2,440, while no other is above Rs 1,800. Bengal and Madras are between Rs. 1,700 and 1,800; the Central Provinces, Panjáb, and North-West are between Rs 1,600 and Rs. 1,700; Bombay is about Rs. 1,550; while Burmah is Rs. 1,430 and Assam only Rs. 1,300. The low average in Burmah and Assam is due to the preponderance of Junior Civilians in those provinces; but Bombay, the North-West, and the Panjáb have distinctly lower averages of pay than Madras and Bengal. The average in Madras has been increased by the graded pension-retiring scheme sanctioned by the Secretary of State last year, and that in the Panjáb by the recent re-organization of the Panjáb Commission. Bombay and the North-West have now the lowest averages of the large provinces.

I have hitherto considered only the provincial totals, i.e., the averages by whole provinces for the 27 years from 1854 to 1880; but if we examine the figures of different years in the different provinces, we shall find the same results even more strongly. It is, however, only in the four regulation provinces that we can examine the detailed figures with any advantage, as the non-regulation provinces and the Government of India are of course on quite a different footing, and cannot be used as the basis for similar calculations.

I give below the figures for these four provinces in the 15 years which are the fairest test, viz., from 1860 (25 years' standing) to 1875 (10 years' standing), there being no Civilians of 1866 :—

We find from this table that Bengal has the highest average pay in 6 out of the 15 years, Madras in 6 also, Bombay in 2, and the North-Western Provinces in one only.

On the other hand the lowest pay falls 7 times to the North-Western Provinces 7 times to Bombay, once to Bengal, and not at all to Madras. There can, therefore, be no doubt that Bengal and Madras have a higher average pay than Bombay and the North-Western Provinces.

For the five years from 1861 to 1865, when a very large number of Civilians were sent out to India, of whom a great proportion are still in the Service, the rates of average pay are :—

No.	Province.	Average pay.	Years.
		Rs.
44	Madras	2,362	1861-65
21	Bombay	2,174
60	Bengal	2,142
50	North-Western Provinces	2,043
Total ... 175

Here North-Western Provinces is 100 rupees worse than Bombay and Bengal and 300 rupees worse than Madras. Bombay and Bengal are about equal, but are 200 rupees worse than Madras and 100 rupees better than North-Western Provinces.

If, however, we take the next five years, 1867 to 1871 (no Civilians having been sent out in 1866), which contain nearly as many Civilians as the first five years, we find the results somewhat different, thus :—

No.	Province.	Average pay.	Years.
		Rs.
38	Bengal	1,575	1867-71
20	Madras	1,355
47	Bombay	1,277
37	North-Western Provinces	1,269
Total ... 142

Here Bengal is distinctly the highest, being 220 rupees above Madras and 300 rupees above Bombay and North-Western Provinces, Madras is nearly 100 rupees above Bombay and North-Western Provinces, which two latter are nearly equal.

So though Bengal and Madras have changed places, inasmuch as Madras was clearly the highest in the first quinquennial period (1861-65), whereas Bengal is clearly highest in the second quinquennial period (1867-71), still we get the same general results in every investigation, viz., that Madras and Bengal are the provinces with high average pay, and Bombay and the North-Western Provinces those with lower average pay. If we combine the two quinquennial periods, the figures of the whole decennial period from 1861 to 1871 (omitting 1866, when there were no Civilians) are :—

No.	Province.	Average pay.	Years.
		Rs.
64	Madras	2,047	1861-71
98	Bengal	1,922
87	North-Western Provinces	1,714
68	Bombay	1,554
Total 317

And we see the same result even more clearly: Madras is first by Rs 125 over Bengal, by Rs. 333 over North-Western Provinces, and by Rs. 493 over Bombay; Bengal is Rs. 208 over North-Western Provinces and Rs. 368 over Bombay, and the North-Western Provinces is Rs. 160 over Bombay: so that there is an average difference of Rs. 164 between each province in the above order.

These results are deduced from the salaries of more than a third of all the Members of the Service, taken when they are from 23 to 18 years' service, and the figures taken as they stand would prove that the average pay of a Civilian of those years is very nearly Rs. 500 a month more in Madras than it is in Bombay and Rs. 333 more than it is in the North-Western Provinces, which would be certainly a very striking difference for ten of the most important years of a Civilian's official life.

But in considering these figures we must of course allow for the fact that a much larger proportion of the whole of the Bombay Civilians are comparatively junior men than is the case in the other provinces. Thus the numbers for the two periods of five years each are :—

Province.	1861-65.	1867-71.	Increase or decrease from 1st to 2nd period.
Madras	44	20	—24
Bengal	60	38	—22
North-Western Provinces	50	37	—13
Bombay	21	47	+26
Total	175	142	...

Thus in Madras the numbers decreased by more than 50 per cent., in Bengal they decreased by about 30 per cent., and in the North-Western Provinces by about 25 per cent.; whereas in Bombay, instead of decreasing, they were more than doubled. Of course this fact affects the average pay of the whole ten years very much, but it does not affect the comparison between the pays of any one year separately. Thus in 1865 the Madras average is Rs. 2,172, that of Bengal Rs. 2,016, that of Bombay Rs. 1,823, and that of North-Western Provinces Rs. 1,662. These figures of course represent the real difference in average pays in the four provinces; but when we deal with the average pay of 10 years and say that for the years 1861 to 1871 the average pay was Rs. 2,047 in Madras, 1,922 in Bengal, 1,714 in North-Western Provinces, and only 1,554 in Bombay, we must always remember that Bombay has double as many Civilians belonging to the latter half (1867-71) of this period as he has to the former half (1861-66), while the other provinces have 50 (Madras), 30 (Bengal), and 25 (North-Western Provinces) per cent. fewer Civilians in the second period than in the first. I mention this specially because it is often the custom to dwell on the low average pay of a province when taken over a series of years; whereas we must then always allow for the proportion of Civilians which may exist in the earlier or later years of the period: and must recollect that the averages are only absolutely true when confined to the figures of one single year.

To get the correct average rates of pay for the whole decennial period from 1861 to 1871, we must correct the figures given above by the percentages of increase or decrease in the second half over the first half, thus: Madras is 2,047 to Bombay's 1,554, but Madras decreased by 50 per cent. in the second period, whereas Bombay increased by more than 100 per cent.: there are therefore 150 per cent. more of the total number in Bombay in the second period than there are in Madras. As this makes a difference of 5 years' standing in the service, it of course affects the figures very materially; and the same argument affects the other provinces (though to a much smaller extent), because Madras decreased by 50 per cent., whereas Bengal only decreased by 30 per cent. and the North-Western Provinces decreased by 25 per cent.

These two latter provinces may be considered practically equal in the distribution of their Civilians throughout the 10 years, so that the figures of 1,922 for Bengal and 1,714 for North-Western Provinces represent very nearly accurately the difference of average pay throughout the ten years; but this cannot be said of the differences between any of the other provinces, as they vary so very considerably in the distribution of their Civilians over different years.

In the following table I have placed under each province and each year the number which that province ranks (according to average pay) among the other provinces. For instance in 1854 Bengal ranks 4th among all the provinces, and 4 is therefore entered against it: in 1860 the Panjáb ranks 2nd, so 2, is entered under it. By adding all these numbers up in vertical columns and dividing by the number of years (in which figures occur), we obtain the total figure of merit of each province, as estimated by average pay, with almost mathematical accuracy, and we see in the bottom line of the table an exact representation in figures of the average pay of Civilians in each province, the lowest figures meaning of course the highest pay.

The following is the order:—

Government of India	2·5
Burmah	3·0
Assam	3·4
Madras	3·5
Panjáb	3·6
Bengal	3·9
Central Provinces	5·2
Bombay	5·5
North-Western Provinces	5·7

And there is no doubt that the average rates of pay are very considerably lower in the three last provinces than elsewhere.

If we compare the table (on page 238) of average pay which I have now calculated on the lists for the 1st of January, 1885, with that for 1880, which appeared in the first edition of this Civil Service List (on page 391), we find some curious differences, and I give the two tables together here for purposes of comparison.

The comparison must of course be made not by calendar years but by the number of years standing; thus on 1st January, 1880 the Civilians of 1869, or 10 years' standing, drew an average salary of Rs. 927 for all India; the Civilians who are now of 10 years' standing i.e., those of 1874, now draw Rs. 873 as the average for all India. I here give the averages for India in parallel columns, and any one can make a similar table for his own province by taking the figures in the table on page 301 of the first edition and putting them alongside of those given in the new table on page 238 of the present volume. I have given the figures for the North-Western Provinces and for Madras as well as for all India in the following table, as they illustrate clearly the variations in pay at different periods in different provinces:—

1879	...	...	...	...	5	732	720	760

It will be seen that on the whole the rates of pay are now very decidedly lower at all periods of standing than they were five years ago in 1880.

Thus, taking the rates for all India at each period of 5 years, we find that they were:—

Years' standing.	Average pay in		Increase or decrease.
	1880.	1885.
	Rs.	Rs.	Rs.
5	686	732	+46
10	927	873	—54
15	1,799	1,258	—541
20	2,784	2,081	—703
25	3,010	3,062	+52
30	3,708	3,515	—193

At 5 years and at 25 years there were slight increases of Rs. 46 and Rs. 52 respectively; these are due to the accidental occurrence of some specially high salaries in those years; but in the other four periods we find substantial decreases amounting at 20 years' standing to the very large difference of Rs. 703 a month; and we may say with undoubted truth that the average of a Civilian's pay all over India has decreased by between Rs. 200 and Rs. 300 a month during the last five years. This added to the continually increasing loss by exchange is undoubtedly a serious diminution in the rate of emolument which a Civilian used to obtain.
